▪ The grasses form a very large and important family of mainly herbaceous plants, and are the dominant vegetation of many areas of the world. They are able to withstand repeated grazing or cutting because of their mode of growth with the growing point mainly at ground level. This makes them suitable as the food of many grazing animals, and also ideal for lawns and playing-fields. The family includes some larger plants, such as the reeds and the bamboos, and several kinds have been cultivated as important cereal crops.

[F gravité or L gravitas f. gravis heavy]

- In Plato's cosmology, gravity is a tendency of like bodies to cluster together. In Aristotle's theory, it is a self-propelling force that draws a body towards the centre of the universe, coinciding with the centre of the earth. In Newton's theory, all bodies in the universe attract each other with a force which depends on the mass of each body and is inversely proportional to the square of the distance between both bodies. After 1916 the Newtonian theory gave way to Einstein's general theory of relativity (see RELATIVITY), but for most terrestrial events the predictions of the two theories do not differ significantly.

Greece /griːs/ a country in SE Europe; pop. (1991) 10,269,000; official language, Greek; capital, Athens. Greece consists of a mountainous peninsula bounded by the Ionian, Mediterranean, and Aegean Seas, and many outlying islands, of which the largest are Crete, Euboea, Lesbos, Chios, and Rhodes. The region was invaded by Greek-speaking peoples *c.*2000–1700 BC, and thereafter enjoyed settled conditions which allowed the Mycenaean civilization to develop and flourish. The arrival in the 11th or 12th century of the Dorians ushered in a dark age (see DARK AGES). This was followed by the period of the city-states, of which the most prominent were Athens and Sparta. Although the city-states could combine in a crisis, as against the Persian invaders whom they unexpectedly defeated in 480 BC, they were weakened by rivalry and internal conflict. In 338 BC they fell to Philip II of Macedon and formed part of the empire of his successor Alexander the Great. In 146 BC Greece was made a Roman province, and, on the division of the Roman Empire in AD 395, became part of the Eastern Empire, centred on Constantinople. It was conquered by the Ottoman Turks (1466) and remained under Turkish rule until the war of independence (1821–30), after which it became a kingdom. In the Second World War Greece was occupied by Axis forces (1941–4); their withdrawal was followed by civil war between Communists and Royalists. The monarchy was restored with British assistance in 1946 and the Communists were finally defeated in 1949. The monarchy was overthrown in a military coup in 1967; a civilian republic was established in 1974. Greece joined the EEC in 1981.

- The ancient form of Greek was spoken in the Balkan peninsula from the 2nd millennium BC; the earliest evidence is to be found in the Linear B tablets dating from *c.*1400–1200 BC. Like Latin, it was a highly inflected language with rather complicated grammar. The Greek alphabet, used from the first millennium BC onwards, was adapted from the Phoenician alphabet. There were a number of dialects, but with the rise of Athens in classical times the dialect of that city (Attic) predominated and formed the basis of what became the standard dialect (koinē) from the 3rd century BC onwards. During the period of the Byzantine Empire and in the four centuries when Greece was under Turkish rule (when Greek was the official language) the koinē continued to be used as a literary language, while the colloquial language evolved separately. Today Greek is spoken by some 11.5 million people in Greece, Cyprus, the US, and elsewhere, and is the official language of Greece. Modern Greek has changed in various ways: the spelling is very conservative but vowels and consonants are now very different from those of ancient Greek, and the morphology has been simplified. Next to demotic, the colloquial modern language which is the basis of the newly emerging standard, there is a puristic archaizing form of the language, katharevousa, which at various periods in the past had considerable importance.

Greek fire n. hist. a combustible composition for setting fire to an enemy's ships, works, etc., emitted by a flame-throwing weapon, so called from being first used by the Greeks besieged in Constantinople (673–8). greenhouse effect n. the trapping of solar heat in a planet's lower atmosphere due to the greater transparency of the atmosphere to visible radiation from the sun than to infrared radiation from the planet's surface. Such an effect is responsible for the surprisingly high surface temperature (460°C) of the planet Venus, whose dense carbon dioxide (CO_2) atmosphere is opaque to infrared radiation. On earth, small amounts of CO_2 and water vapour naturally present in air act in a similar but limited way. However, the increasing quantity of atmospheric CO_2 from the burning of fossil fuels, together with the release of other greenhouse gases (notably chlorofluorocarbons) and the effects of deforestation, are expected to cause a significant rise in world temperatures with unforeseen climatic and environmental effects. (See also GLOBAL WARMING.)

Gregorian calendar /grɪˈgɔːrɪən/ n. the modified calendar introduced by Pope Gregory XIII in 1582, adopted in Scotland in 1600 and in England and Wales in 1752, and now in use throughout most of the Western world. It is a modification of the Julian calendar, necessary to bring it into closer conformity with astronomical data. To correct errors which had accumulated because the average Julian year of $365\frac{1}{4}$ days was 11 min. 10 sec. longer than the solar year, 10 days were suppressed in 1582 (in England and Wales, 11 in 1752). As a further refinement Gregory provided that of the centenary years (1600, 1700, etc.) only those exactly divisible by 400 should be counted as leap years. Dates reckoned by the Gregorian calendar are sometimes designated 'New Style'. [med.L Gregorianus f. LL Gregorius f. Gk Grēgorios Gregory]

Gregorian chant /grɪˈgɔːrɪən/ n. plainsong ritual music or chant, in the Roman Catholic Church generally known as 'Gregorian' after Pope Gregory the Great (see GREGORY, ST), although it is likely that his contribution was one of organization and standardization rather than composition.

Gregorian telescope /grɪˈgɔːrɪən/ n. hist. a reflecting telescope in which light reflected from a concave elliptical secondary mirror is brought to a focus just behind a hole in the primary mirror. It was soon rendered obsolete by the introduction of Newtonian and Cassegrain telescopes. [James Gregory, Sc. mathematician (1638–75), who devised it]

Gregory, St /ˈgregərɪ/, (known as St Gregory the Great) (*c.*540–604), pope (as Gregory I) 590–604 and Doctor of the Church. He made peace with the Lombards after their invasions of Italy and appointed governors to the Italian cities, thus establishing the temporal power of the papacy. He sent St Augustine to England to lead the country's conversion to Christianity. He is also credited with the introduction of Gregorian chant. Feast day, 12 Mar.

Gregory of Nazianzus, St /ˈgregərɪ/ (329–89), Doctor of the Church, bishop of Constantinople. With St Basil and St Gregory of Nyssa he was an upholder of Orthodoxy against the Arian and Apollinarian heresies, and influential in restoring adherence to the Nicene Creed. Feast day, (in the Eastern Church) 25 and 30 Jan.; (in the Western Church) 2 Jan. (formerly 9 May).

Gregory of Nyssa, St /ˈgregərɪ, ˈnɪsə/ (*c.*330–*c.*395), Doctor of the Eastern Church, bishop of Nyssa in Cappadocia. The brother of St Basil, he was an Orthodox follower of Origen and joined with St Basil and St Gregory of Nazianzus in opposing Arianism. Feast day, 9 Mar.

Gregory of Tours, St /ˈgregərɪ, tʊə(r)/ (*c.*540–94), Frankish bishop and historian. He was elected bishop of Tours in 573; his writings provide the chief authority for the early Merovingian period of French history. Feast day, 17 Nov.

Grenada /grəˈneɪdə/ a country in the West Indies, consisting of the island of Grenada (the southernmost of the Windward Islands) and the southern Grenadines; pop. (est. 1990) 94,000; languages, English (official), English Creole; capital, St George's. The island of Grenada was sighted in 1498 by Columbus; it was inhabited by Caribs, who had wiped out the earlier Arawak people. Colonized by the French, it was ceded to Britain in 1763, recaptured by the French, and restored to Britain in 1783. It became an independent Commonwealth state in 1974. Seizure of power by a left-wing military group in 1983 prompted an invasion by the US and some Caribbean countries; they withdrew in 1985. □ Grenadian adj. & n.

Gretna Green /ˈgretnə/ a village in Scotland just north of the English border near Carlisle, formerly a popular place for runaway couples from England to be married according to Scots law without the parental consent required in England for people under a certain age. A valid marriage could be contracted in Scotland merely by a declaration of consent by the two parties before a witness. The practice of eloping to Gretna Green began after English law made it impossible to conduct a marriage clandestinely (in 1753), but became less common when a series of laws passed from 1857 diminished the differences in Scottish and English marital law; the age of consent to marriage was made uniform (at 18) throughout the UK in 1969.

Grey^{2} /greɪ/, Sir George (1812–98), British statesman and colonial administrator, Prime Minister of New Zealand 1877–9. He was appointed as governor in South Australia (1840), New Zealand (1845; 1861), and Cape Colony (1854), in each case at a time of conflict between the native peoples and European settlers. As Prime Minister of New Zealand he brought peace to the country and established good relations with the Maoris, learning their language and studying their mythology and culture.

Grey^{3} /greɪ/, Lady Jane (1537–54), queen of England 9–19 July 1553. In 1553 Jane, the granddaughter of Henry VIII's sister Mary, was forced by the Duke of Northumberland to marry his son to ensure a Protestant succession. Northumberland then persuaded the dying Edward VI to name Jane as his successor, but she was deposed after nine days on the throne by forces loyal to Mary (Edward's elder sister). Jane was executed in the following year because she was seen as a potential focal point for Protestant opposition to Mary's Catholic regime.

Hadrian /'heɪdrɪən/ (full name Publius Aelius Hadrianus) (AD 76–138), Roman emperor 117–138. He became emperor as the adopted successor of Trajan, and spent much of his reign touring the provinces of the Empire, promoting good government and loyalty to Rome, and securing the frontiers. The building of Hadrian's Wall was begun after his visit to Britain in 122.

Hadrian's Wall a Roman defensive wall across northern England, stretching from the Solway Firth in the west to the mouth of the River Tyne in the east (about 120 km, 74 miles). It was begun in AD 122, after the emperor Hadrian's visit, to defend the province of Britain against invasions of tribes from the north. The wall was built of stone and was 2.5–3 m thick, with forts and fortified posts at intervals along its length. After Hadrian's death the frontier was advanced to the Antonine Wall, which the Romans proved unable to hold; after being overrun and restored several times Hadrian's Wall was abandoned AD *c.*410.

Haiti /ˈheɪtɪ/ a country in the Caribbean, occupying the western part of the island of Hispaniola; pop. (est. 1990) 6,500,000; official languages, Haitian Creole, French; capital, Port-au-Prince. The western third of Hispaniola was ceded to France by Spain in 1697. The French already had settlements there, established by pirates, and after 1697 many slaves were imported from West Africa to work on sugar plantations. In 1791 the slaves rose in rebellion under Toussaint L'Ouverture and other leaders, and in 1804 the colony was proclaimed an independent state under the name of Haiti. It was the second country in the Americas (after the US) to achieve freedom from colonial rule. Haiti was administered by the US (1915–34) after a succession of corrupt dictatorships. From 1957 to 1986 the country was under the oppressive dictatorship of the Duvalier family. The overthrow of Jean-Claude Duvalier in 1986 was followed, in 1990, by the election of Jean-Bertrand Aristide (b. 1953) as Haiti's first democratically chosen President, but in the following year the military seized power. In 1994 the US sent troops to Haiti in an attempt to ensure the restoration of democracy.

- The half-life is a characteristic property of any process which occurs with a constant probability, such as radioactive decay. The half-life of a particular isotope is independent of physical and chemical environment; values range from minute fractions of a second for extremely unstable nuclei to very much longer periods. Radioactive isotopes with moderately long half-lives are potentially more dangerous because their radioactivity persists longer. Knowledge of the half-lives of radiocarbon and other naturally occurring isotopes forms the basis of their use for dating purposes.

halfpenny /ˈheɪpnɪ/ n. (also ha'penny) (pl. -pennies or -pence /-p(ə)ns/) (in the UK) a former bronze coin worth half a penny. ¶ Withdrawn in 1984 (cf. FARTHING).

Hallé /'hæleɪ/, Sir Charles (German name Karl Halle) (1819–95), German-born pianist and conductor. He came to Manchester from Paris in 1848 to escape the revolution and remained there for the rest of his life. He founded his own orchestra (still known as the Hallé Orchestra and based in Manchester) and inaugurated a series of orchestral concerts (the Hallé Concerts) in 1858.

hallelujah var. of ALLELUIA.

Haller /'hælə(r)/, Albrecht von (1708–77), Swiss anatomist and physiologist. He pioneered the study of neurology and experimental physiology, and wrote the first textbook of physiology.

Halley /'hælɪ, -'hɔ:lɪ/, Edmond (1656–1742), English astronomer and mathematician. Halley became an influential Fellow of the Royal Society and friend of Newton, the publication of whose Principia was due largely to him. He became professor of geometry at Oxford and was later appointed Astronomer Royal. He realized that nebulae were clouds of luminous gas among the stars, and that the aurora was a phenomenon connected with the earth's magnetism. Halley is best known for recognizing that a bright comet (later named after him) had appeared several times, and for successfully predicting its return.

Halley's Comet a bright comet whose reappearance in 1758–9 was predicted by Edmond Halley. Its orbital period is about 76 years, and earlier appearances can be traced in historical documents. It is first recorded in 240 BC and last appeared, though rather faintly, in 1985–6. A representation of its appearance in 1066 is visible on the Bayeux Tapestry. The European space probe Giotto passed close to Halley's Comet in 1986, obtaining a large quantity of data.

hallmark /'hɔ:lmɑ:k/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a mark used at Goldsmiths' Hall (and by the UK assay offices) for marking the standard of gold, silver, and platinum. (See note below.) 2 any distinctive feature esp. of excellence. ● v.tr. 1 stamp with a hallmark. 2 designate as excellent.

▪ In the UK hallmarking dates from a statute of 1300, in the reign of Edward I, and the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths has been responsible for the assaying and marking of plate in London since then. With certain exceptions, all gold, silver, and platinum articles are required by law to be hallmarked before they are offered for sale. The marks impressed include a number of symbols indicating the maker, standard, date, and office. Many countries outside the UK have a system of plate marks. In the US there is no hallmarking; local regulations existed in the 18th and 19th centuries, but there is no consistent system of symbols. Signatory countries of an International Convention — the UK, Austria, Finland, Ireland, Portugal, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland — recognize equivalents to their own hallmarks applied in the others.

Hallowe'en /ˌhæləʊ'i:n/ the evening of 31 October, the eve of All Saints' Day. Hallowe'en is of pre-Christian origin, being associated with Samhain, the Celtic festival marking the end of the year and the beginning of winter, when ghosts and spirits were thought to be abroad. It was adopted as a Christian festival but gradually became a secular rather than a Christian observance, involving the dressing up and wearing of masks, and was particularly strong in Scotland. These secular customs were popularized in the US in the late 19th century by newly arrived immigrants (esp. from Ireland), and later developed into the custom of children playing trick or treat. [HALLOW + EVEN^{2}]

Hallowes /'hæləʊz/, Odette (born Marie Céline) (1912–95), French heroine of the Second World War. She entered occupied France in 1942 and worked secretly as a British agent until captured by the Gestapo in 1943. Imprisoned until 1945, she refused to betray her associates in spite of torture. ▪ Harlequinade was an important element in the development of the English pantomime. It originated in Italian commedia dell'arte and consisted of story-telling dances in which Harlequin played the leading role. In the 19th century Joseph Grimaldi made the English character of the clown into the chief personage, and the harlequinade began to be preceded by a fairy tale. As Harlequin's importance lessened and the fairy tales became longer and more popular, the harlequinade dwindled into a short epilogue to what became the present English pantomime and was finally abandoned completely.

Harold /ˈhærəld/ the name of two kings of England:

Harold I (known as Harold Harefoot) (d.1040), reigned 1035–40. Harold was an illegitimate son of Canute and first came to the throne when his half-brother Hardecanute (Canute's legitimate heir) was king of Denmark and thus absent at the time of his father's death. When a third royal claimant was murdered a year later, Harold was formally recognized as king, although Hardecanute returned to the kingdom when Harold himself died.

Harold II (*c.*1019–66), reigned 1066, the last Anglo-Saxon king of England. He succeeded Edward the Confessor, having dominated the latter's court in the last years of his reign, but was faced with two invasions within months of his accession. He resisted his half-brother Tostig and the Norse king Harald Hardrada at Stamford Bridge, but was killed and his army defeated at the Battle of Hastings; the victor, William of Normandy, took the throne as William I.

▪ The heart of mammals and birds is a four-chambered muscular pump whose function is to drive arterial blood through the body and venous blood through the lungs. Other vertebrates and some invertebrates possess a somewhat simpler organ. In humans the two sides of the heart each consist of a receiving chamber or atrium and a pumping chamber or ventricle. Venous blood from the body, laden with carbon dioxide, flows into the right atrium, is drawn into the right ventricle, and is ejected by the contraction or beat of the ventricle into the pulmonary artery and so to the lungs. Oxygenated blood from the lungs flows into the left atrium, passes to the left ventricle, and is pumped into the aorta and so to all arteries of the body.

[OE hǣtu f. Gmc]

▪ In the late 18th and early 19th centuries heat was believed to be a kind of fluid substance, called caloric. The view of heat as a form of energy emerged with the development of thermodynamics, and the kinetic theory related it to the random motions of the individual molecules that make up matter. Addition of heat to a body does not always lead to an increase in temperature, because the body may change state (from solid to liquid, or liquid to gas).

heated /ˈhiːtɪd/ adj. 1 (of a person, discussions, etc.) angry; inflamed with passion or excitement. 2 made hot. □ heatedly adv.

▪ In Jewish and Christian belief heaven has traditionally been regarded as a place in which the virtuous see God face to face; in addition, Christians have believed that the body will be reunited with the soul in heaven after Judgement Day. Faith in Christ is believed to allow every Christian the opportunity to reach it, whereas in Judaism only exceptional human beings are raised to heaven. Theologians today see heaven less as a place than as a state in which the full reality of God is experienced. In Islamic belief heaven is depicted as a blissful paradise of material delights, although this description is generally supposed to be more allegorical than literal.

Heaviside /'hevɪˌsaɪd/, Oliver (1850–1925), English physicist and electrical engineer. His theoretical contributions improved long-distance telephone communication and had significance to both cable and wireless telegraphy. He studied inductance, introduced the concept of impedance, and pioneered the use of calculus for dealing with the properties of electrical networks. In 1902 he suggested (independently of A. E. Kennelly) the existence of a layer in the atmosphere responsible for reflecting radio waves back to earth. It is now known as the Heaviside or Kennelly–Heaviside layer, or the E region of the ionosphere.

▪ Hebrew was spoken and written in ancient Palestine for more than a thousand years. It is written from right to left, originally in an alphabet consisting of twenty-two letters, all of them consonants (vowel signs were added to the text of the Hebrew Bible in the 6th century AD to facilitate reading). By *c.*500 BC it had come greatly under the influence of Aramaic, which had largely replaced it as a spoken language by AD *c.*200, but it continued as the religious language of the Jewish people. It was revived as a spoken language in the 19th century, the modern form having its roots in the ancient language but drawing words from the vocabularies of European languages, and is now the official language of the state of Israel.

Hebrew Bible the sacred writings of Judaism, called by Christians the Old Testament. The Hebrew Bible consists of the Torah (the Law or Pentateuch, ascribed to Moses), the Prophets, and the Hagiographa or Writings. (See Old Testament.)

Hebrides, the /'hebrɪˌdiːz/ (also called Western Isles) a group of about 500 islands off the NW coast of Scotland. The Inner Hebrides include the islands of Skye, Mull, Jura, Islay, Iona, Coll, Eigg, Rhum, Staffa, and Tiree. The Little Minch separates this group from the Outer Hebrides, which form part of the Western Isles and include the islands of Lewis with Harris, Barra, North and South Uist, and the island group of St Kilda. Until the end of the 13th century the Hebrides group was also regarded as including the islands in the Firth of Clyde, the peninsula of Kintyre in SW Scotland, the Isle of Man, and the (Irish) isle of Rathlin. They formed part of the kingdom of Scotland from 1266, when they were ceded to the Scottish king Alexander III by Magnus of Norway. Norse occupation has influenced the language, customs, and place-names, although most of the present-day population have Celtic affinities and Gaelic is still spoken on several of the islands. ▪ Hedonism as an ethical doctrine constitutes a central thesis in Cyrenaic, Epicurean, and utilitarian philosophy. In its philosophical sense it is commonly distinguished by its definition of pleasure as the satisfaction of desires or wishes rather than as immediate physical enjoyment. While the ancient Cyrenaics equated pleasure with the satisfaction of sensual desires, the Epicureans valued the mental serenity brought about by an absence of anxiety and by the rational control of desire. Utilitarians like Bentham and Mill examine the pleasure given to society in general rather than to the individual by an act.

Hegel /ˈheɪg(ə)l/, Georg Wilhelm Friedrich (1770–1831), German philosopher. His philosophy represents a complex system of thought with far-reaching influences and diverse applications. He is especially known for his three-stage process of dialectical reasoning (set out in his Science of Logic, 1812–16), which underlies his idealist concepts of historical development and the evolution of ideas; Marx based his theory of dialectical materialism on this aspect of Hegel's work. Other major works include The Phenomenology of Mind (1807), which describes the progression of the human mind from consciousness through self-consciousness, reason, spirit, and religion to absolute knowledge. □ Hegelian /hɪˈgeɪlɪən/ adj. & n. Hegelianism n.

Hegira /ˈhedʒɪrə/ n. (also Hejira, Hijra /ˈhɪdʒrə/) Muhammad's departure from Mecca to Medina in AD 622, which marks the consolidation of the first Muslim community. The departure was made necessary by the opposition of the merchant community in Mecca to both Muhammad's preaching and his attempt to achieve a social solidarity that was not tribally based. Its significance is indicated by the fact that the Islamic calendar (which is based on lunar months) is dated from AD 622 (= 1 AH). [med.L hegira f. Arab. hijra departure from one's country f. hajara separate] Heidegger /ˈhaɪˌdegə(r)/, Martin (1889–1976), German philosopher. In Being and Time (1927) he examines the setting of human existence in the world. He regards Angst (dread) as a fundamental part of human consciousness, a symptom of the gravity of the human situation with its radical freedom of choice and awareness of death. Consequently human beings are continually attempting to escape their destiny, either by disguising it or by distracting their attention from its inevitability. Although he did not consider himself an existentialist, his work had a significant influence on existentialist philosophers such as Sartre.

Heidelberg /ˈhaɪd(ə)lˌbɜːg/ a city in SW Germany, on the River Neckar, in Baden-Württemberg; pop. (1991) 139,390. It is noted for its university, which received its charter in 1386 and is the oldest in Germany, and for its medieval castle.

helicopter /ˈhelɪˌkɒptə(r)/ n. & v. ● n. an aircraft which derives both lift and propulsive power from horizontally revolving rotors. (See note below.) ● v.tr. & intr. transport or fly by helicopter. [F hélicoptère f. Gk helix (see HELIX) + pteron wing]

- A helicopter has one or two sets of rotor blades powered by either piston or jet engines. Control of motion is provided by varying the pitch of the blades, i.e. the angle at which they meet the airstream. Lift at take-off, for example, is obtained by steeply pitching the blades; forward thrust comes by increasing pitch at the rear of the blades' circuit. Additional directional control may sometimes be provided by a tail-rotor. The helicopter differs from the autogiro, which, since its rotors are not powered, cannot take off vertically. The first practicable helicopters were developed in the 1930s, principally by Igor Sikorsky. Experimental models had flown earlier, and the principle of their operation dates back at least to Leonardo da Vinci, who drew and described a helicopter-like flying machine in the 15th century.

Heligoland /ˈhelɪgəʊˌlænd/ (German Helgoland /ˈhɛlgoˌlant/) a small island in the North Sea, one of the North Frisian Islands, off the coast of Germany. Originally the home of Frisian seamen, it was Danish from 1714 until seized by the British navy in 1807 and later ceded officially to Britain. In 1890 it was returned to Germany in exchange for Zanzibar and Pemba, and became an important naval base. The naval installations were demolished after the Second World War, and the island became part of the Federal Republic of Germany in 1952.

- The concept of hell as a place where the souls of sinners receive punishment is widespread in Christian, Jewish, and Islamic tradition. It derives from the notion of the underworld as a place where departed souls continue to exist after death, which is found in classical mythology, Judaism (see SHEOL), and other ancient religions. The physical descriptions of the underworld vary: commonly found attributes include darkness, coldness, and location underground. The notion of hell as a place of eternal punishment developed from the idea that the virtuous would be rewarded in heaven: the souls of those who were not selected for heavenly reward would remain in the underworld, where they would be punished for their misdeeds. The popular Christian idea of hell as a dark and fiery pit is derived from texts such as Matt. 25:41 and Rev. 19:20; it was powerfully elaborated in medieval Christian art and literature.

He was an advocate of realism and believed that the artist must be a social force; as a teacher at the New York School of Art (1898–1928), he encouraged his students to turn away from academicism and towards a realistic depiction of everyday life. The Ashcan School of painters was formed largely as a result of his influence.

Henrietta Maria /ˌhenrɪˌetə məˈrɪːə/ (1609–69), daughter of Henry IV of France, queen consort of Charles I of England 1625–49. Her Roman Catholicism heightened public anxieties about the court's religious sympathies and was a contributory cause of the English Civil War. From 1644 she lived mainly in France.

Henry^1 /ˈhenrɪ/ the name of eight kings of England:

Henry I (1068–1135), youngest son of William I, reigned 1100–35. On the death of his brother, William II, Henry seized the throne in the absence of his other brother, Robert of Normandy; Henry conquered Normandy in 1105. After his only son was drowned in 1120 there were problems with the succession, and although Henry extracted an oath of loyalty to his daughter Matilda from the barons in 1127, his death was followed almost immediately by the outbreak of civil war.

Henry II (1133–89), son of Matilda, reigned 1154–89. The first Plantagenet king, Henry restored order after the reigns of Stephen and Matilda, added Anjou and Aquitaine to the English possessions in France, established his rule in Ireland, and forced the king of Scotland to acknowledge him as overlord of that kingdom. Henry was less successful in reducing the power of the Church; opposition to his policies was led by Thomas à Becket, who was eventually murdered by four of Henry's knights.

Henry III (1207–72), son of John, reigned 1216–72. Until Henry declared himself of age to rule personally in 1227, his regent the Earl of Pembroke kept the rebellious barons in check, but afterwards the king's ineffectual government caused widespread discontent, ending in Simon de Montfort's defeat and capture of the king in 1264. Although Henry was restored after the defeat of the rebels a year later, real power resided with his son, who eventually succeeded him as Edward I.

Henry IV (known as Henry Bolingbroke) (1367–1413), son of John of Gaunt, reigned 1399–1413. He returned from exile in 1399 to overthrow Richard II and establish the Lancastrian dynasty. His reign was scarred by rebellion, both in Wales and in the north, where the Percy family raised several uprisings. Although Henry defeated Sir Henry Percy ('Hotspur') in 1403, the Percy threat did not abate until the head of the family was killed in 1408.

Henry V (1387–1422), son of Henry IV, reigned 1413–22. He renewed the Hundred Years War soon after coming to the throne and defeated the French at Agincourt in 1415. By the Treaty of Troyes (1420) Henry was named successor to Charles VI of France and betrothed to his daughter Catherine of Valois. When the Dauphin repudiated the treaty, Henry returned to France but fell ill and died, leaving his infant son to inherit the throne.

Henry VI (1421–71), son of Henry V, reigned 1422–61 and 1470–1. Succeeding his father while still an infant, Henry VI proved to have a recurrent mental illness which made him unfit to rule effectively on his own. During his reign the Hundred Years War with France was finally lost, and government by the monarchy, in the hands of a series of regents and noble favourites, became increasingly unpopular. In the 1450s opposition coalesced round the House of York, and, after intermittent civil war (see WARS OF THE ROSES), Henry was deposed in 1461 by Edward IV. In 1470 Henry briefly regained his throne following a Lancastrian uprising, but was deposed again and murdered soon after.

Henry VII (known as Henry Tudor) (1457–1509), the first Tudor king, son of Edmund Tudor, Earl of Richmond, reigned 1485–1509. Although he was the grandson of Owen Tudor, it was through his mother, a great-granddaughter of John of Gaunt, that he inherited the Lancastrian claim to the throne. Having grown up in exile in France, Henry returned to England in 1485 and ascended the throne after defeating Richard III at Bosworth Field. Threatened in the early years of his reign by a series of Yorkist plots, Henry eventually established an unchallenged Tudor dynasty, dealing ruthlessly with other claimants to the throne. As king he continued the strengthening of royal government commenced by his Yorkist predecessors.

Henry VIII (1491–1547), son of Henry VII, reigned 1509–47. Henry had six wives (Catherine of Aragon, Anne Boleyn, Jane Seymour, Anne of Cleves, Catherine Howard, Katherine Parr), two of whom he had executed and two of whom he divorced. His efforts to divorce his first wife, Catherine of Aragon, which were opposed by the pope, led to England's break with the Roman Catholic Church and indirectly to the establishment of Protestantism. Henry's ensuing dissolution of the monasteries not only destroyed most of the remaining vestiges of the old religious Establishment but also changed the pattern of land ownership. The final years of Henry's reign were marked by wars and rebellion.

Henry^2 /ˈhenrɪ/ (known as Henry the Navigator) (1394–1460), Portuguese prince. The third son of John I of Portugal, he was a leading patron of voyages of exploration, from which he earned his title. He established a school of navigation at Cape St Vincent and organized and funded many voyages of discovery, most notably south along the African coast. The efforts of his captains, who reached as far south as Cape Verde and the Azores, laid the groundwork for later Portuguese imperial expansion south-east round Africa to the Far East.

Henry^3 /ˈhenrɪ/ the name of seven kings of the Germans, six of whom were also Holy Roman emperors, notably:

Henry I (known as Henry the Fowler) (*c.*876–936), reigned 919–36. As duke of Saxony, he was elected king by the nobles of Saxony and Franconia following the death of Conrad I (903–18). He waged war successfully against the Slavs in Brandenburg, the Magyars, and the Danes, from whom he gained the territory of Schleswig in 934.

Henry III (1017–56), reigned 1039–56, Holy Roman emperor 1046–56. He brought stability and prosperity to the empire, defeating the Czechs in 1041 and fixing the frontier between Austria and Hungary in 1043. A devout Christian, he introduced religious reforms, attacked corruption in the Church, and strengthened the papacy, securing the appointment of four successive German popes.

Henry IV (1050–1106), son of Henry III, reigned 1056–1105, Holy Roman emperor 1084–1105. Following the end of his regency in 1065 he came into increasing conflict with Pope Gregory VII (*c.*1020–85), which culminated in 1076 when Henry called a council to depose the Pope. Gregory retaliated by excommunicating Henry and absolving his subjects from their oaths of loyalty to him. In 1077 Henry obtained absolution by doing penance before Gregory at Canossa in Italy, and spent the next three years waging war on his rebellious subjects. He finally managed to depose Gregory in 1084, being crowned emperor by his successor in the same year.

henry /ˈhenrɪ/ n. (pl. -ies or henrys) Electr. the SI unit of inductance (symbol: H), equal to the inductance of a circuit in which an electromotive force of one volt is produced by a current changing at the rate of one ampere per second. Henry Bolingbroke, Henry IV of England (see HENRY^1).

Henry IV /ˈhenrɪ, French ɑ̃ri/ (known as Henry of Navarre) (1553–1610), king of France 1589–1610. As king of Navarre, Henry was the leader of Huguenot forces in the latter stages of the French Wars of Religion, but on succeeding the Catholic Henry III he became Catholic himself in order to guarantee peace. He founded the Bourbon dynasty, established religious freedom with the Edict of Nantes (1598), and restored order after prolonged civil war. He was assassinated by a Catholic fanatic.

heraldist /'herəldɪst/ n. an expert in heraldry. [HERALD]

heraldry /'herəldrɪ/ n. the science or art of a herald, especially in blazoning armorial bearings and settling the right of persons to bear arms. Bearings probably originated as designs on shields at a time when chain-mail was worn and a bold, simple identification device was needed. Such designs are found in western Europe from the 12th century; similar designs from Japan are found in the same period. By the 13th century heraldry in Europe had so developed that it had its own terminology, based on Old French. Armorial bearings are hereditary; strictly they belong to the head of a family. The use of heraldic devices is now widespread and they are sought by corporate bodies for reasons of prestige and identification.

▪ That 'like begets like' has been recognized since ancient times, but a real understanding of the nature of heredity had to await the discovery of the sex cells (gametes), the phenomenon of fertilization, and the existence of genes. Lamarck proposed that characteristics acquired by parents during life could by passed on to their offspring, but this view is no longer accepted. It was also widely believed in the 19th century that sexual reproduction involved 'blending' of the characteristics of the two parents in the offspring. It was Mendel who first demonstrated that the hereditary material consists of discrete hereditary factors now known as genes (see MENDELISM).

Herschel^1 /ˈhɜːʃ(ə)l/, Sir (Frederick) William (1738–1822), German-born British astronomer, the father of stellar astronomy. He was a skilful telescope maker whose painstaking cataloguing of the skies resulted in the discovery of the planet Uranus. His unsuccessful attempts to measure the distances of the stars convinced him of their remoteness, while his mapping of stellar distributions suggested to him that the sun was a member of a great star system forming the disc of the Milky Way. He was elected first president of the Royal Astronomical Society in 1820.

Herschel^2 /ˈhɜːʃ(ə)l/, Sir John (Frederick William) (1792–1871), British astronomer and physicist, son of William Herschel. He extended the sky survey to the southern hemisphere, cataloguing many new clusters and nebulae. He carried out pioneering work in photography, to which he introduced the words positive and negative, and also made contributions to meteorology and geophysics.

Hertz /hɜːts/, Heinrich Rudolf (1857–94), German physicist and pioneer of radio communication. He worked for a time as Helmholtz's assistant in Berlin, and in 1886 began studying the electromagnetic waves that Maxwell had predicted. He demonstrated them experimentally, and also showed that they behaved like light and radiant heat, thus proving that these phenomena, too, were electromagnetic. In 1889 he was appointed professor of physics at Bonn, but he died of blood-poisoning at the early age of 37.

hertz /hɜːts/ n. (pl. same) the SI unit of frequency (symbol Hz), equal to one cycle per second. [HERTZ] Hertzsprung–Russell diagram /ˌhɜːtssprʌŋˈrʌs(ə)l/ n. Astron. a two-dimensional graph, devised independently by Ejnar Hertzsprung (1873–1967) and H. N. Russell, in which the absolute magnitudes of stars are plotted against their spectral types. Stars are found to occupy only certain regions of this diagram, depending on their mass and the stage of their life cycle. Most stars fall on a line or main sequence, which represents a relationship between the properties of a star that is still relying on hydrogen as its energy source; when a star has exhausted its hydrogen and begun to consume other elements, it will occupy a different position on the diagram.

Herut /heˈruːt/ hist. a right-wing Israeli political party founded by Menachem Begin in 1948, from the remains of the Irgun group. Herut was one of the parties that combined to form the Likud coalition in 1973. [Heb., = freedom]

Hess^1 /hes/, Dame Myra (1890–1965), English pianist. She was noted for her performances of the music of Schumann, Beethoven, Mozart, and Bach. Her many piano transcriptions of baroque music include 'Jesu, Joy of Man's Desiring' from Bach's Cantata No. 147.

Hess^2 /hes/, Victor Francis (born Victor Franz Hess) (1883–1964), Austrian-born American physicist. He worked on atmospheric electricity and radioactivity. After making several balloon flights he was able to show that some ionizing radiation was extraterrestrial in origin, but did not come from the sun. The high-energy particles responsible were later termed cosmic rays, and their study led to the discovery of the positron by C. D. Anderson. They shared the Nobel Prize for physics in 1936.

Hess^3 /hes/, (Walther Richard) Rudolf (1894–1987), German Nazi politician. He was deputy leader of the Nazi Party (1934–41) and a close friend of Hitler. In 1941, secretly and on his own initiative, he parachuted into Scotland to negotiate peace with Britain. He was imprisoned for the duration of the war, and after his conviction at the Nuremberg war trials was sentenced to life imprisonment in Spandau prison, where he died.

Hesse^1 /hes/ (German Hessen /ˈhɛs(ə)n/) a state of western Germany; capital, Wiesbaden.

Hesse^2 /hes, ˈhesə/, Hermann (1877–1962), German-born Swiss novelist and poet. In 1911 he visited India, where he became interested in Indian mysticism; this experience, together with his involvement with Jungian analysis in 1916–17, had a marked effect on his work, which emphasizes spiritual values as expressed in Eastern religion. His novels — titles include Siddhartha (1922), Der Steppenwolf (1927), and The Glass Bead Game (1943) — met with renewed interest in the 1960s and 1970s. Hesse was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1946.

Hinduism /'hındu:͵ız(ə)m/ n. a religious and social tradition which has developed over thousands of years and is found primarily in India, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, and Nepal. Hinduism is extremely heterogeneous, with no one sacred text or body of doctrine; unlike most religions, it implies no single belief concerning the nature of god: it embraces polytheism, monotheism, and monism. Hinduism developed from the Vedic tradition, but perhaps more important than the Veda as a Hindu text today is the Bhagavadgita, which helped to establish cults relating to the deities Vishnu (Krishna) and Siva. It also outlines the central idea of moksha, or liberation of the soul from the cycle of perpetual death and rebirth: the state of the soul in this cycle is established by the idea of karma. Fundamental to Hinduism are the beliefs concerning the nature of the universe and the structure of society. Brahman is the ultimate reality underlying all being and is also the name given to the highest (priestly) caste. The caste system (see CASTE, VARNA) underpins Hindu society and is described partly by the key concept of dharma, both the eternal law underlying the whole of existence and the social and religious duty of the individual. □ Hinduize v.tr. (also -ise).

Hitler /ˈhɪtlə(r)/, Adolf (1889–1945), Austrian-born Nazi leader, Chancellor of Germany 1933–45. A co-founder of the National Socialist German Workers' Party (which later became known as the Nazi Party) after the First World War, Hitler was imprisoned in 1923 as one of the organizers of an unsuccessful putsch in Munich. While in prison he wrote Mein Kampf, an exposition of his political ideas. After his release his powers as an orator soon won prominence for him and the Nazi Party; following his appointment as Chancellor in 1933 he was able to overthrow the Weimar Republic and establish the totalitarian Third Reich, proclaiming himself Führer. His expansionist foreign policy precipitated the Second World War, while his fanatical anti-Semitism and desire to create an Aryan German state led to the deaths of millions of Jews. Hitler committed suicide in his Berlin headquarters as Soviet Allied forces were attacking the city. □ Hitlerite n. & adj.

Hobbema /'hɒbɪmə/, Meindert (1638–1709), Dutch landscape painter. He was a pupil of Jacob van Ruisdael and was one of the last 17th-century Dutch landscape painters, since demand for such work was diminishing in the late 1660s. His work features a narrow range of favourite subject-matter, often including a water-mill and trees round a pool. Among his best-known paintings is Avenue at Middelharnis (1689).

Hobbes /hobz/, Thomas (1588–1679), English philosopher. There were two key components in Hobbes's conception of humankind: he was a materialist, claiming that there was no more to the mind than the physical motions discovered by science, and a cynic, holding that human action was motivated entirely by selfish concerns, notably fear of death. His view of society was expressed in his most famous work, Leviathan (1651), in which he argued, by means of a version of a social contract theory, that simple rationality made social institutions and even absolute monarchy inevitable.

▪ Games similar to hockey were played in ancient Greece, Persia, and Arabia, while the related games hurling and shinty have long been established in Ireland and Scotland. Hockey in its modern form, however, dates from the late 19th century in England, when rules were codified and men's and women's hockey associations set up. Play begins with the bully or bully off and the ball is propelled using the flat side of the stick. The pitch is similar to that used in football, but the goals are smaller, and scoring shots must be struck from within a semicircular line painted around the goal. The game is played particularly in the UK, Commonwealth countries, and Europe; in North America it is known as field hockey.

Hollywood /'holɪˌwʊd/ a district of Los Angeles, the principal centre of the US film industry. The variety of the local landscape, the sunny weather, and the availability of cheap land go some way towards explaining the appeal of Hollywood for the early film industry. The first studio was established in Hollywood in 1911 and fifteen others followed in the same year; by 1920 Hollywood was producing 90 per cent of US films. Its heyday continued throughout the 1930s and 1940s, but the district experienced a relative decline after the 1940s; from the 1950s many films and programmes were made for television.

holography /hə'logrəfɪ/ n. Physics the study or production of holograms. Holography was proposed by Dennis Gabor in 1948, but only became practicable when the laser was invented in 1960. To make a hologram, laser light is split into two beams, of which one is reflected from an object. The two beams are then recombined. The reflected light is no longer coherent, and as a result the two beams interfere to produce a pattern of dark and bright areas which can be photographically recorded as a hologram. A three-dimensional image of the object can be constructed from the interference pattern by illuminating it with a laser beam. Some holograms, like those placed on credit cards to prevent fraud, can be viewed with white light, and holograms can also be made with coherent radiation other than visible light. □ holographic /ˌholə'græfɪk/ adj. holographically adv.

Holy Office an ecclesiastical court of the Roman Catholic Church established in 1542 as part of the Inquisition, as the final court of appeal in trials of heresy. In 1965 it was renamed the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith; its function is to promote as well as to safeguard what it regards as sound doctrine in the Roman Catholic Church.

Holy Roman Empire the empire set up in western Europe following the coronation of Charlemagne as emperor in the year 800, which lasted until the title was abolished in 1806. The office was created by the medieval papacy in an attempt to provide a secular deputy to rule Christendom; in fact the emperor proved to be more often a rival than an ally. The emperor never ruled the whole of Christendom and from Otto I's coronation (962) the title was largely the preserve of German dynasties, although at times the territory of the empire was extensive and included Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and parts of Italy and the Netherlands. The ideal behind the empire of a united Christendom was shaken by the Reformation, and after the Thirty Years War (1618–48) the institution was again seriously weakened.

homeopathy /ˌhəʊmɪ'opəθɪ, ˌhom-/ n. (also homoeopathy) the treatment of disease by minute doses of drugs that in a healthy person would produce symptoms like those of the disease (cf. ALLOPATHY). A form of alternative medicine, homeopathy is based on the theory that 'like cures like'. This doctrine, known to the Greeks and Romans, was first given definite expression by Samuel Hahnemann (1755–1843), a German physician and chemist who had become dissatisfied with orthodox medical teaching. Homeopathy is widely practised, although both the effectiveness and the mechanism of any therapeutic action are uncertain. Hahnemann claimed that a homeopathic drug induced a condition which displaced the disease; others maintained that the drug stimulated the body's protective responses. □ homeopathist n. homeopathic /-mɪə'pæθɪk/ adj. homeopathically adv. [G Homöopathie f. Homer /'həʊmə(r)/ (8th century BC), Greek epic poet. He is traditionally held to be the author of the Iliad and the Odyssey. Various cities in Ionia claim to be his birthplace, and he is said to have been blind. Modern scholarship has revealed the place of the Homeric poems in a preliterate oral tradition, in which a succession of bards elaborated the traditional stories of the heroic age; questions of authorship are thus very difficult to answer. In later antiquity Homer was regarded as the greatest and unsurpassable poet, and his poems were constantly used as a model and source by others.

home rule n. (also Home Rule) a movement for the government of a colony, dependent country, etc., by its own citizens, specifically the movement advocating devolved government for Ireland, 1870–1914. The campaign was one of the dominant forces in British politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, particularly in that Irish nationalists, under Charles Parnell and later John Redmond, frequently held the balance of power in the House of Commons. After 1885 the Liberal Party supported Home Rule, but the Conservatives, joined by the Liberal Unionists, continued to oppose it. The situation was complicated by the opposition to Home Rule of the Ulster Unionists on one side and Sinn Fein on the other. A Home Rule Act was finally passed in 1914 but was suspended until after the First World War. After the Easter Rising of 1916 and Sinn Fein's successes in the general election of 1918, and following three years of unrest and guerrilla warfare (1918–21), southern Ireland became the Irish Free State (1921), Northern Ireland remaining part of the UK.

Homo /'həʊməʊ, 'hɒm-/ n. a genus of primates of which humans (Homo sapiens) are the modern representatives. The genus has existed for about 2 million years, of which H. sapiens has occupied perhaps the last 400,000 years. The genus appears to have evolved in East Africa with the advent of H. habilis ('handy man'), from Olduvai Gorge, Tanzania, and an as yet undifferentiated species from Koobi Fora, Kenya. It is believed that Homo diverged from Australopithecus africanus, being distinguished not only physically but also by social and cultural traits such as the making of tools and the use of fire. H. erectus ('upright man'), first appearing about 1.5 million years BP, is thought to have radiated out from East Africa to the more varied environments of the remainder of the Old World (see JAVA MAN, PEKING MAN). Archaic H. sapiens may have appeared as early as *c.*400,000 BP, at least in Europe, and survived as late as *c.*100,000 BP in Asia. Neanderthal man probably evolved in Europe *c.*120,000 BP. Modern humans, who first appeared in the upper palaeolithic (see CRO-MAGNON MAN), are classified as H. sapiens sapiens. The principal trends within the genus Homo through time are: an increase in brain size and complexity, an increase in the complexity of culture and social relationships, and the increasing ability to modify the environment. [L, = man]

- The Hopi are Pueblo Indians, traditionally living a settled life in houses of stone and adobe in pueblos (villages) and surviving through growing crops and herding. The Hopi are a small group (fewer than 10,000), but retain some of their rich cultural life, exemplified by ceremonies such as the snake dance, in which live rattlesnakes are handled.

Hopkins^{1} /ˈhɒpkɪnz/, Sir Anthony (Philip) (b.1937), Welsh actor, a US citizen from 2000. His acting career began on the stage in 1961, with his screen début following in 1967. His films include The Elephant Man (1980), The Bounty (1984), and The Remains of the Day (1993). He won an Oscar for his performance in The Silence of the Lambs (1991).

Hopkins^{2} /ˈhɒpkɪnz/ Sir Frederick Gowland (1861–1947), English biochemist, considered the father of British biochemistry. He carried out pioneering work on 'accessory food factors' essential to the diet, later called vitamins. Hopkins shared a Nobel Prize in 1929.

Hopkins^{3} /ˈhɒpkɪnz/, Gerard Manley (1844–89), English poet. Influenced at Oxford by John Henry Newman, Hopkins converted to Roman Catholicism in 1866 and became a Jesuit two years later. He wrote little poetry until 1876, when the shipwreck of a vessel carrying nuns and other emigrants to America the previous year inspired him to write 'The Wreck of the Deutschland'. The poem makes bold use of Hopkins's 'sprung rhythm' technique, as do his best-known poems 'Windhover' and 'Pied Beauty', both written in 1877. His work, collected in Poems (1918), was published posthumously by his friend Robert Bridges.

Horace /ˈhɒrɪs/ (full name Quintus Horatius Flaccus) (65–8 BC), Roman poet of the Augustan period. His two books of Satires departed from earlier convention with their realism and irony directed at both the satirist and his targets. His Odes, displaying a mastery of poetic form in the style of earlier Greek lyric poets, celebrate friendship, love, good wine, and the contentment of a peaceful rural life in contrast to the turmoil of politics and civil war. (Horace had fought with Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in 42.) They were much imitated by later ages, especially by the poets of 17th-century England. Horace was also a notable literary critic; his Ars Poetica influenced John Dryden and the 18th-century Augustans in their critical writing.

▪ The only surviving undomesticated horse is Przewalski's horse (Equus ferus) of Mongolia, which is extinct in the wild. Other 'wild horses' are actually feral domesticated animals, the surviving wild members of the horse family being the asses and zebras. The horse evolved from multi-toed ancestors in North America, but it was extinct there by the time that it was domesticated in the Old World in the Bronze Age. Horses were used from around the 19th century BC to draw war chariots, while the use of cavalry dates from the Iron Age. Heavy horses were developed in medieval times for use in battle, finding a use also in traction and gradually replacing the ox. The appearance of horses in Britain was altered in the 17th century by interbreeding with Arab and Barbary stock for racehorses and hunters.

Huggins /ˈhʌgɪnz/, Sir William (1824–1910), British astronomer. He pioneered spectroscopic analysis in astronomy, showing that nebulae are composed of luminous gas, and that some comets contain hydrocarbon molecules. He discovered the red shift in stellar spectra, correctly interpreting it as being due to the Doppler effect and using it to measure recessional velocities.

Hughes^1 /hjuːz/, Edward James ('Ted') (1930–98), English poet. His work is pervaded by his vision of the natural world as a place of violence, terror, and beauty, as can be seen in his first volume of poetry, The Hawk in the Rain (1957). This vision is continued in later works; Crow (1970) explores the legends surrounding creation and birth through the character of the sinister and mocking crow. Hughes was appointed Poet Laureate in 1984. From 1956 to 1963 he was married to the American poet Sylvia Plath.

Hughes^2 /hjuːz/, Howard (Robard) (1905–76), American industrialist, film producer, and aviator. When his father died in 1924 he took control of the Hughes Tool Company; this formed the basis of his large fortune. He made his début as a film director in 1926; notable titles include Hell's Angels (1930) and The Outlaw (1941). From 1935 to 1938 he broke many world aviation records, sometimes while flying an aircraft of his own design. For the last twenty-five years of his life he lived as a recluse.

Hugo /ˈhjuːgəʊ/ Victor(-Marie) (1802–85), French poet, novelist, and dramatist. He was a leading figure of French romanticism, and brought a new freedom of diction, subject, and versification to French poetry; his many collections include Les Feuilles d'automne (1831). He set out his ideas on drama in the preface to his play Cromwell (1827); this included the view that the theatre should express both the grotesque and the sublime of human existence and became a manifesto of the romantic movement. The success of his drama Hernani (1830) signalled the triumph of romanticism over the conventions which had prevailed in French theatre since the time of Racine and Corneille. Notre Dame de Paris (1831) and Les Misérables (1862) are among his best-known novels and demonstrate Hugo's concern for social and political issues. Between 1851 and 1870 he lived in exile in Guernsey, where he wrote his satire against Napoleon III (Les Châtiments, 1853).

Huguenot /ˈhjuːgəˌnəʊ, -ˌnɒt/ n. a French Protestant of the 16th–17th centuries. Largely Calvinist, the Huguenots suffered severe persecution, most notably the Massacre of St Bartholomew in 1572. As a political faction they were involved in the French Wars of Religion against the Catholic majority, a conflict that was ended temporarily by the Edict of Nantes (1598), which guaranteed the Huguenots freedom of worship. However, civil wars occurred again in the 1620s, after which the military and political power of the Huguenots was destroyed by Cardinal Richelieu's government. The Edict of Nantes was revoked by Louis XIV in 1685 and Protestantism was not legalized again in France until after the Revolution; many thousands of Huguenots emigrated from France. humanism /'hju:məˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. an outlook or system of thought attaching prime importance to human rather than divine or supernatural matters. The term humanism does not refer to a unified theory. Historically, it was first applied to studies promoting human culture, and especially to the cultural movement of the Renaissance, which turned away from medieval scholasticism (with its theological bias) to value the human achievement of ancient Greece and Rome. In philosophy, the term has encompassed systems of thought stressing rational enquiry and human experience over abstract theorizing or orthodox religion. More broadly, humanist beliefs stress the potential value and goodness of human beings, emphasize common human needs, and seek solely rational ways of solving human problems.

Humboldt /'hʌmbəʊlt/, Friedrich Heinrich Alexander, Baron von (1769–1859), German explorer and scientist. Humboldt travelled in Central and South America (1799–1804) and wrote extensively on natural history, meteorology, and physical geography. He proved that the Amazon and Orinoco river systems are connected, and ascended to 5,877 m (19,280 ft) in the Andes, the highest ascent ever made at that time, researching the relation of temperature and altitude. He spent the next twenty years in Paris writing up his results, returning later to Berlin, where he served at the Prussian court. He wrote a popular work in several volumes, Kosmos (1845–62), describing the structure of the universe as it was then known.

Hume /hju:m/, David (1711–76), Scottish philosopher, economist, and historian. His philosophy rejected the possibility of certainty in knowledge, and he agreed with John Locke that there are no innate ideas, only a series of subjective sensations, and that all the data of reason stem from experience. His philosophical legacy is particularly evident in the work of 20th-century empiricist philosophers. In economics, he attacked mercantilism and anticipated the views of economists such as Adam Smith. Among his chief works are A Treatise of Human Nature (1739–40) and a five-volume History of England (1754–62).

Hundred Years War a war between France and England, conventionally dated 1337–1453. The war consisted of a series of conflicts in which successive English kings attempted to dominate France; it began when Edward III claimed the throne of France following the death of the last Capetian king. Despite an early string of English military successes, most notably Crécy and Poitiers, the House of Valois retained its position, and in the reign of Edward's son, Richard II, hostilities ceased almost completely. The English claim was revived by Henry V, who renewed hostilities in 1415 with a crushing victory at Agincourt and occupied much of northern France. England once again proved unable to consolidate the advantage, however, and under the regency of Henry VI gradually lost control of conquered territory to French forces, revitalized in the first instance by Joan of Arc. With the exception of Calais, all English conquests had been lost by 1453.

Hungary /'hʌŋgərɪ/ (called in Hungarian Magyarország) a country in central Europe; pop. (est. 1990) 10,600,000; official language, Hungarian; capital, Budapest. Settled by the Magyars in the 9th century, Hungary was the centre of a strong Magyar kingdom in the late Middle Ages, but was conquered first by the Turks in the 16th century and then by the Habsburgs in the 17th century. In the 19th century, nationalist pressure resulted in increased Hungarian power and autonomy within the empire, which led to the establishment of the Dual Monarchy in 1867 (see AUSTRIA–HUNGARY). Following the collapse of the empire in 1918, Hungary became an independent kingdom, although it lost territory to neighbouring states. After participation in the Second World War on the Axis side, Hungary was occupied by the USSR, and became a Communist state. A liberal reform movement was crushed by Soviet troops in 1956. The Communist system was abandoned towards the end of 1989.

Hussein^1, Abdullah ibn, see ABDULLAH IBN HUSSEIN.

Hussein^2 /hʊ'seɪn/, ibn Talal (also Husain) (1935–99), king of Jordan 1953–99. Throughout his reign Hussein steered a middle course in his policies, seeking to maintain good relations both with the West and with other Arab nations. His moderate policies led to conflict with the Palestinians who had entered Jordan after the Six Day War of 1967, and after a short civil war in 1970 the Palestinians were expelled. In 1990 he acted as a mediator between the opposing sides following the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, but in the subsequent Gulf War Jordan was the only Middle Eastern country to give open support to Iraq. In 1994 he signed a treaty normalizing relations with Israel.

Hussein^3 /hʊ'seɪn/, Saddam (also Husain) (full name Saddam bin Hussein at-Takriti) (b.1937), Iraqi President, Prime Minister, and head of the armed forces 1979–2003. In 1968 he played a leading role in the coup which returned the Baath Socialist Party to power. As President he suppressed opposing parties, built up the army and its weaponry, and made himself the object of an extensive personality cult. During his presidency Iraq fought a war with Iran (1980–8) and invaded Kuwait (1990), from which Iraqi forces were expelled in the Gulf War of 1991. He was overthrown in 2003 following the invasion and occupation of Iraq by US-led forces.

Husserl /'hʊsɜːl/, Edmund (Gustav Albrecht) (1859–1938), German philosopher. His work forms the basis of the school of phenomenology; having originally trained as a mathematician he turned to philosophy, seeking in his work the clarity and certainty he found in mathematics and science. He rejected metaphysical assumptions about what actually exists, and explanations of why it exists, in favour of pure subjective consciousness as the condition for all experience, with the world as the object of this consciousness. He taught at the University of Freiberg, where Martin Heidegger was among his pupils.

Hussite /'hʌsaɪt/ n. a member or follower of a religious and nationalist movement begun by John Huss. After Huss's execution the Hussites, with the support of many Bohemian nobles, took up arms against the Holy Roman Empire and demanded a set of reforms that anticipated the Reformation. The movement was split by a schism in which the more extreme faction was defeated, but most of the demands of the moderate Hussites were then granted (1436), and a Church was established that remained independent of the Roman Catholic Church until 1620. An early Protestant group that arose among the Hussites, the Bohemian Brethren, is thought to have formed the basis of the Moravian Church. □ Hussitism n.

Hutton^{1} /'hʌt(ə)n/, James (1726–97), Scottish geologist. Hutton's views, controversial at the time, became accepted tenets of modern geology. In opposition to Abraham Werner's Neptunian theory, he emphasized heat as the principal agent in the formation of land masses, and held that rocks such as granite were igneous in origin. He described the processes of deposition and denudation and proposed that such phenomena, operating over millions of years, would account for the present configuration of the earth's surface; it therefore followed that the earth was very much older than was believed. Hutton's views were not widely known until a concise account was published in 1802.

Hutton^{2} /'hʌt(ə)n/ Sir Leonard ('Len') (1916–90), English cricketer. In his long career he played for Yorkshire (1934–55) and for England (1937–55). He scored a record 364 in the 1938 test against Australia and became the first professional captain of the England team in 1953.

Huxley^{1} /'hʌkslɪ/, Aldous (Leonard) (1894–1963), English novelist and essayist. During the 1920s and 1930s he lived in Italy and France; his fiction during this period included Antic Hay (1923) and the futuristic Brave New World (1932), probably his best-known work. In 1937 he left for California, where he remained for the rest of his life and pursued his interests in Eastern mysticism and parapsychology. In 1953 he experimented with psychedelic drugs, writing of his experiences with mescalin in The Doors of Perception (1954).

Huxley^{2} /'hʌkslɪ/, Sir Julian (1887–1975), English biologist. He contributed to the early development of the study of animal behaviour, was a notable interpreter of science to the public through writing and broadcasting, and became the first director-general of UNESCO (1946–8). He was the grandson of Thomas Henry Huxley.

Huxley^{3} /'hʌkslɪ/, Thomas Henry (1825–95), English biologist. A qualified surgeon, Huxley made his reputation as a marine biologist during service as a ship's surgeon off the coast of northern Australia. Later he turned to the study of fossils, especially of fishes and reptiles, and became a leading supporter of Darwinism in opposition to Richard Owen. On the basis of a detailed study in anthropology he wrote Man's Place in Nature (1863), and coined the word agnostic to describe his own beliefs. Huxley was a supporter of education for the less privileged and argued for the inclusion of science in the school curriculum. His grandson was Sir Julian Huxley.

Huygens /'haɪgənz/, Christiaan (1629–95), Dutch physicist, mathematician, and astronomer. Although probably best known for his pendulum-regulated clock, which he patented in 1657 (see CLOCK^{1}), his work covered a number of fields. He improved the lenses of his telescope, discovered a satellite of Saturn, and also that planet's rings, whose nature had eluded Galileo. In dynamics he studied centrifugal force and the problem of colliding bodies, but his greatest contribution was his wave theory of light. He formulated the principle that every point on a wave front is the centre of a new wave, and this allowed him to explain reflection and refraction, including the double refraction of light in some minerals.

Huygens eyepiece n. a simple eyepiece consisting of two separate planoconvex lenses, used chiefly in refracting telescopes of long focal length.

Hwange /'hwæŋgɪ/ a town in western Zimbabwe; pop. (1982) 39,000. It was known as Wankie until 1982 and is the centre of the country's coal-mining industry. Nearby is the Hwange National Park, established as a game reserve in 1928 and as a park in 1949.

hydrocarbon /ˌhaɪdrəʊˈkɑːb(ə)n/ n. Chem. a compound of hydrogen and carbon.

hydrocele /ˈhaɪdrəˌsiːl/ n. Med. the accumulation of serous fluid in a body sac.

hydrocephalus /ˌhaɪdrəˈsefələs, -ˈkefələs/ n. Med. an accumulation of fluid in the brain, esp. in young children, which makes the head enlarge and can cause mental handicap. □ hydrocephalic /-sɪˈfælɪk, -kɪˈfælɪk/ adj.

hydrochloric acid /ˌhaɪdrəˈklɔːrɪk, -ˈklɒrɪk/ n. Chem. a strong acid consisting of the gas hydrogen chloride (chem. formula: HCl) dissolved in water.

hydrochloride /ˌhaɪdrəˈklɔːraɪd/ n. Chem. a compound of an organic base with hydrochloric acid.

hydrocortisone /ˌhaɪdrəˈkɔːtɪˌzəʊn/ n. Biochem. a steroid hormone produced by the adrenal cortex, used medicinally to treat inflammation and rheumatism. Also called cortisol.

hydrocyanic acid /ˌhaɪdrəsaɪˈænɪk/ n. Chem. a highly poisonous volatile liquid (chem. formula: HCN) with a characteristic odour of bitter almonds. Also called hydrogen cyanide, prussic acid.

hydrodynamics /ˌhaɪdrəʊdaɪˈnæmɪks/ n. the science of forces acting on or exerted by fluids (esp. liquids). □ hydrodynamic adj. hydrodynamical adj. hydrodynamicist /-mɪsɪst/ n. [mod.L hydrodynamicus (as HYDRO-, DYNAMIC)] hydroelectric /ˌhaɪdrəʊɪˈlektrɪk/ adj. 1 generating electricity by utilization of water-power. (See note below.) 2 (of electricity) generated in this way. □ hydroelectricity /-ˌɪlekˈtrɪsɪtɪ, -ˌel-/ n.

▪ Hydroelectric power is the most widely used form of renewable energy, accounting for nearly a fifth of the world's electric power. It is particularly suitable for hilly country with substantial rainfall, and tens of gigawatts are generated by the largest power stations. The first was commissioned in northern England in 1880 and the principle has remained the same since then; a dam or barrage is used to hold back a head of water, which generates electricity as it passes out past turbines that drive generators.

hydrofining /ˈhaɪdrəʊˌfaɪnɪŋ/ n. a catalytic process in which a petroleum product is stabilized and its sulphur content reduced by treatment with gaseous hydrogen under relatively mild conditions, so that unsaturated hydrocarbons and sulphur compounds undergo selective hydrogenation. □ hydrofined adj. [HYDRO- + refining (see REFINE)] hydrofluoric acid /ˌhaɪdrəʊˈflʊərɪk/ n. Chem. a fuming liquid, sufficiently corrosive to attack glass, consisting of the gas hydrogen fluoride (chem. formula: HF) dissolved in water.

hydrofoil /ˈhaɪdrəˌfɔɪl/ n. a boat equipped with a device consisting of planes which work in a similar way to those of an aerofoil, serving to increase speed by lifting the hull out of the water. The first true hydrofoil is thought to have been built by Enrico Forlanini, an Italian inventor, in 1898–1905, but such craft were not widely used until the 1950s. [HYDRO-, after AEROFOIL] hydrogel /ˈhaɪdrəʊˌdʒel/ n. a gel in which the liquid component is water.

hydrogen /ˈhaɪdrədʒən/ n. a colourless, odourless, highly inflammable, gaseous chemical element (atomic number 1; symbol H). (See note below.) □ hydrogen bond a weak electrostatic interaction between an electronegative atom and a hydrogen atom bonded to a different electronegative atom. hydrogen cyanide hydrocyanic acid. hydrogen peroxide a colourless viscous unstable liquid (chem. formula: H_2O_2) with strong oxidizing properties, used as a mild antiseptic and bleach. hydrogen sulphide a colourless poisonous gas (chem. formula: H_2S) with a disagreeable smell, formed by rotting animal matter. □ hydrogenous /haɪˈdrɒdʒɪnəs/ adj. [F hydrogène (as HYDRO-, -GEN)]

▪ Hydrogen was first recognized by Henry Cavendish in 1766 and named by Antoine Lavoisier. It is the lightest of the elements and has the simplest atomic structure, a single electron orbiting the nucleus which (in the commonest isotope) consists of a single proton (see also DEUTERIUM, TRITIUM). Hydrogen is by far the commonest element in the universe, although not on the earth, where it occurs chiefly combined with oxygen as water. It is also a constituent of nearly all organic compounds.

hydrogenase /haɪˈdrɒdʒɪˌneɪz, -ˌneɪs/ n. Biochem. an enzyme that catalyses the reduction of a substrate by hydrogen, as in some micro-organisms.

hydrogenate /haɪˈdrɒdʒɪˌneɪt, ˈhaɪdrədʒəˌneɪt/ v.tr. charge with or cause to combine with hydrogen. □ hydrogenation /-ˌdrɒdʒɪˈneɪʃ(ə)n, ˌhaɪdrədʒə-/ n.

hydrogen bomb n. a bomb whose destructive power comes from the rapid release of nuclear energy by fusion of hydrogen nuclei. In a hydrogen bomb there is a thermonuclear fusion reaction involving nuclei of two hydrogen isotopes, deuterium and tritium; the reaction produces helium nuclei and releases energy in relatively greater quantities than does nuclear fission. A temperature of about 10 million °C is needed to sustain fusion and this is provided by using an atom bomb as a trigger; various kinds of weapons combining fission and fusion have been developed. The first hydrogen bomb, more than a thousand times more powerful than the first atom bomb, was tested by the US in November 1952, the USSR following suit a few months later. Also called H-bomb.

hydrogeology /ˌhaɪdrəʊdʒɪˈɒlədʒɪ/ n. the branch of geology dealing with underground and surface water. □ hydrogeologist n. hydrogeological /-dʒɪəˈlɒdʒɪk(ə)l/ adj.

hydrography /haɪˈdrɒgrəfɪ/ n. the science of surveying and charting seas, lakes, rivers, etc. □ hydrographer n. hydrographic /ˌhaɪdrəˈgræfɪk/ adj. hydrographical adj. hydrographically adv.

hydroid /ˈhaɪdrɔɪd/ n. & adj. Zool. ● n. a hydrozoan coelenterate of the order Hydroida, in which the polyp phase is predominant, e.g. hydra, sea-anemones, corals, etc. ● adj. of or relating to this order. [mod.L Hydroida f. HYDRA] hydrolase /ˈhaɪdrəʊˌleɪz, -ˌleɪs/ n. Biochem. an enzyme that catalyses the hydrolysis of a substrate.

hydrology /haɪˈdrɒlədʒɪ/ n. the science of the properties of the earth's water, esp. of its movement in relation to land. □ hydrologist n. hydrologic /ˌhaɪdrəˈlɒdʒɪk/ adj. hydrological adj. hydrologically adv.

hydrolyse /ˈhaɪdrəˌlaɪz/ v.tr. & intr. (also hydrolyze) subject to or undergo the chemical action of water.

hydrolysis /haɪˈdrɒlɪsɪs/ n. the chemical reaction of a substance with water, usu. resulting in decomposition. □ hydrolytic /ˌhaɪdrəˈlɪtɪk/ adj.

hydromagnetics /ˌhaɪdrəmægˈnetɪks/ n. pl. (usu. treated as sing.) = MAGNETOHYDRODYNAMICS. □ hydromagnetic adj.

hydromania /ˌhaɪdrəˈmeɪnɪə/ n. a craving for water.

hydromechanics /ˌhaɪdrəʊmɪˈkænɪks/ n. the mechanics of liquids; hydrodynamics.

hydrometer /haɪˈdrɒmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for measuring the density of liquids. □ hydrometry n. hydrometric /ˌhaɪdrəˈmetrɪk/ adj.

hydronium ion /haɪˈdrəʊnɪəm/ n. Chem. = HYDROXONIUM ION. [contr.]

hydropathy /haɪˈdrɒpəθɪ/ n. the treatment of disorders by external and internal application of water. □ hydropathist n. hydropathic /ˌhaɪdrəˈpæθɪk/ adj. [HYDRO-, after HOMEOPATHY etc.]

hydrophil /ˈhaɪdrəfɪl/ adj. (also hydrophile /-ˌfaɪl/) = HYDROPHILIC. [as HYDROPHILIC] hydrophilic /ˌhaɪdrəˈfɪlɪk/ adj. Chem. 1 having an affinity for water. 2 readily mixing with or wetted by water. [HYDRO- + Gk philos loving] hydrophobia /ˌhaɪdrəˈfəʊbɪə/ n. 1 a morbid aversion to water, esp. as a symptom of rabies in humans. 2 rabies, esp. in humans. [LL f. Gk hudrophobia (as HYDRO-, -PHOBIA)] hydrophobic /ˌhaɪdrəˈfəʊbɪk/ adj. 1 of or suffering from hydrophobia. 2 a lacking an affinity for water. b not readily wettable.

hydrophone /ˈhaɪdrəˌfəʊn/ n. a microphone for the detection of sound-waves in water.

hydrophyte /ˈhaɪdrəˌfaɪt/ n. an aquatic plant, or a plant which needs much moisture.

hydroplane /ˈhaɪdrəˌpleɪn/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a light fast motor boat designed to skim over the surface of water. 2 a finlike attachment which enables a submarine to rise and fall in water. ● v.intr. 1 (of a boat) skim over the surface of water with its hull lifted. 2 = AQUAPLANE v. 2.

hydroponics /ˌhaɪdrəˈpɒnɪks/ n. the process of growing plants in sand, gravel, or liquid, without soil and with added nutrients. □ hydroponic adj. hydroponically adv. [HYDRO- + Gk ponos labour] hydroquinone /ˌhaɪdrəˈkwɪnəʊn, -kwɪˈnəʊn/ n. Photog. a substance formed by the reduction of benzoquinone, used as a photographic developer.

hydrosphere /ˈhaɪdrəˌsfɪə(r)/ n. the waters of the earth's surface.

hydrostatic /ˌhaɪdrəˈstætɪk/ adj. of the equilibrium of liquids and the pressure exerted by liquid at rest. □ hydrostatic press = hydraulic press. □ hydrostatical adj. hydrostatically adv. [prob. f. Gk hudrostatēs hydrostatic balance (as HYDRO-, STATIC)] hydrostatics /ˌhaɪdrəˈstætɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) the branch of mechanics concerned with the hydrostatic properties of liquids.

hydrotherapy /ˌhaɪdrəˈθerəpɪ/ n. the use of water in the treatment of disorders, usu. exercises in swimming-pools for arthritic or partially paralysed patients. □ hydrotherapist n.

hydrothermal /ˌhaɪdrəˈθɜːm(ə)l/ adj. of the action of heated water on the earth's crust. □ hydrothermally adv.

hydrothorax /ˌhaɪdrəˈθɔːræks/ n. Med. the condition of having fluid in the pleural cavity.

hydrotropism /haɪˈdrɒtrəˌpɪz(ə)m/ adj. a tendency of plant roots etc. to turn to or from moisture.

hydrous /ˈhaɪdrəs/ adj. Chem. & Mineral. containing water. [Gk hudōr hudro- water] hydroxide /haɪˈdrɒksaɪd/ n. Chem. a metallic compound containing oxygen and hydrogen either in the form of the hydroxide ion (OH^-) or the hydroxyl group (–OH).

hydroxonium ion /ˌhaɪdrɒkˈsəʊnɪəm/ n. Chem. the hydrated hydrogen ion, H_3O^+. [HYDRO- + OXY-^{2} + -onium] hydroxy- /haɪˈdrɒksɪ/ comb. form Chem. having a hydroxide ion (or ions) or a hydroxyl group (or groups) (hydroxybenzoic acid). [HYDROGEN + OXYGEN] hydroxyl /haɪˈdrɒksaɪl, -sɪl/ n. Chem. the monovalent group containing hydrogen and oxygen, as –OH. [HYDROGEN + OXYGEN + -YL]

hydrozoan /ˌhaɪdrəˈzəʊən/ n. & adj. Zool. ● n. an aquatic coelenterate of the class Hydrozoa, of mainly marine forms that are frequently colonial and have both polyp and medusa phases, e.g. hydra, Portuguese man-of-war, etc. ● adj. of or relating to this class. [mod.L Hydrozoa (as HYDRA, Gk zōion animal)] hyena /haɪˈiːnə/ n. (also hyaena) a flesh-eating mammal of the family Hyaenidae, resembling a dog but with hind limbs shorter than forelimbs. □ laughing hyena a hyena, Crocuta crocuta, whose call is compared to a fiendish laugh. [ME f. OF hyene & L hyaena f. Gk huaina fem. of hus pig] hygiene /ˈhaɪdʒiːn/ n. 1 a a study, or set of principles, of maintaining health. b conditions or practices conducive to maintaining health. 2 sanitary science. [F hygiène f. mod.L hygieina f. Gk hugieinē (tekhnē) (art) of health f. hugiēs healthy] hygienic /haɪˈdʒiːnɪk/ adj. conducive to hygiene; clean and sanitary. □ hygienically adv.

hygienics /haɪˈdʒiːnɪks/ n.pl. (usu. treated as sing.) = HYGIENE 1a.

hygienist /ˈhaɪdʒiːnɪst/ n. a specialist in the promotion and practice of cleanliness for the preservation of health.

hygro- /ˈhaɪgrəʊ/ comb. form moisture. [Gk hugro- f. hugros wet, moist] hygrology /haɪˈgrɒlədʒɪ/ n. the study of the humidity of the atmosphere etc.

hygrometer /haɪˈgrɒmɪtə(r)/ n. an instrument for measuring the humidity of the air or a gas. □ hygrometry n. hygrometric /ˌhaɪgrəˈmetrɪk/ adj.

hygrophilous /haɪˈgrɒfɪləs/ adj. (of a plant) growing in a moist environment.

hygrophyte /ˈhaɪgrəˌfaɪt/ n. = HYDROPHYTE.

hygroscope /ˈhaɪgrəˌskəʊp/ n. an instrument which indicates but does not measure the humidity of the air.

hygroscopic /ˌhaɪgrəˈskɒpɪk/ adj. 1 of the hygroscope. 2 (of a substance) tending to absorb moisture from the air. □ hygroscopically adv.

hying pres. part. of HIE.

Hyksos /ˈhɪksɒs/ n.pl. a people of mixed Semitic and Asian descent who invaded Egypt and settled in the Nile delta *c.*1640 BC. They formed the 15th and 16th dynasties of Egypt and ruled a large part of the country until driven out *c.*1532 BC. [Gk Huksōs (interpreted by Manetho as 'shepherd kings' or 'captive shepherds') f. Egyptian heqa khoswe foreign rulers] hylic /ˈhaɪlɪk/ adj. of matter; material. [LL hylicus f. Gk hulikos f. hulē matter]

hylo- /ˈhaɪləʊ/ comb. form matter. [Gk hulo- f. hulē matter] hylomorphism /ˌhaɪləˈmɔːfɪz(ə)m/ n. Philos. the theory that physical objects are composed of matter and form. [HYLO- + Gk morphē form] hylozoism /ˌhaɪləˈzəʊɪz(ə)m/ n. Philos. the doctrine that all matter has life. [HYLO- + Gk zōē life]

Hymen /ˈhaɪmen/ originally a cry (Hymen Hymeniae) used at ancient Greek weddings, and understood (rightly or wrongly) as an invocation of a youth of that name, a handsome young man who had been happily married.

hymen /ˈhaɪmen/ n. Anat. a membrane which partially closes the opening of the vagina and is usu. broken at the first occurrence of sexual intercourse. □ hymenal adj. [LL f. Gk humēn membrane]

hymeneal /ˌhaɪmɪˈniːəl/ adj. literary of or concerning marriage. [HYMEN] hymenium /haɪˈmiːnɪəm/ n. (pl. hymenia /-nɪə/) the spore-bearing surface of certain fungi. [mod.L f. Gk humenion dimin. of humēn membrane]

Hymenoptera /ˌhaɪməˈnoptərə/ n.pl. Zool. an order of insects comprising the ants, bees, wasps, ichneumons, and sawflies, which have two pairs of transparent wings and frequently a sting. Some of them form social colonies, but many are parasitic. □ hymenopteran n. & adj. hymenopterous adj. [mod.L f. Gk humenopteros membrane-winged (as HYMENIUM, pteron wing)] hymn /hɪm/ n. & v. ● n. 1 a song of praise, esp. to God in Christian worship, usu. a metrical composition sung in a religious service. 2 a song of praise in honour of a god or other exalted being or thing. ● v. 1 tr. praise or celebrate in hymns. 2 intr. sing hymns. □ hymn-book a book of hymns. □ hymnic /ˈhɪmnɪk/ adj. [ME ymne etc. f. OF ymne f. L hymnus f. Gk humnos] hymnal /ˈhɪmn(ə)l/ n. & adj. ● n. a hymn-book. ● adj. of hymns. [ME f. med.L hymnale (as HYMN)] hymnary /ˈhɪmnərɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) a hymn-book.

hymnody /ˈhɪmnədɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) 1 a the singing of hymns. b the composition of hymns. 2 hymns collectively. □ hymnodist n. [med.L hymnodia f. Gk humnōidia f. humnos hymn: cf. PSALMODY] hymnographer /hɪmˈnogrəfə(r)/ n. a writer of hymns. □ hymnography n. [Gk humnographos f. humnos hymn] hymnology /hɪmˈnolədʒɪ/ n. (pl. -ies) 1 the composition or study of hymns. 2 hymns collectively. □ hymnologist n.

hyoid /ˈhaɪɔɪd/ n. & adj. Anat. ● n. (in full hyoid bone) a U-shaped bone in the neck which supports the tongue. ● adj. of or relating to this. [F hyoïde f. mod.L hyoīdes f. Gk huoeidēs shaped like the letter upsilon (hu)] hyoscine /ˈhaɪəˌsiːn/ n. a poisonous alkaloid found in plants of the nightshade family, esp. of the genus Scopolia, used as an antiemetic in motion sickness and a preoperative medication for examination of the eye. Also called scopolamine. [f. HYOSCYAMINE] hyoscyamine /ˌhaɪəˈsaɪəˌmiːn/ n. a poisonous alkaloid obtained from henbane, having similar properties to hyoscine. [mod.L hyoscyamus f. Gk huoskuamos henbane f. hus huos pig + kuamos bean] hypaesthesia /ˌhaɪpɪsˈθiːzɪə/ n. (US hypesthesia) Med. a diminished capacity for sensation, esp. of the skin. □ hypaesthetic /-ˈθetɪk/ adj. [mod.L (as HYPO-, Gk -aisthēsia f. aisthanomai perceive)] hypaethral /haɪˈpiːθrəl/ adj. (also hypethral) 1 Archit. open to the sky; roofless. 2 literary open-air. [L hypaethrus f. Gk hupaithros (as HYPO-, aithēr air)] hypallage /haɪˈpælədʒɪ/ n. Rhet. the transposition of the natural relations of two elements in a proposition (e.g. Melissa shook her doubtful curls). [LL f. Gk hupallagē (as HYPO-, allassō exchange)]

Hypatia /haɪˈpeɪʃɪə/ (*c.*370–415), Greek philosopher, astronomer, and mathematician. She taught geometry, algebra, and astronomy at Alexandria, and was head of the Neoplatonist school there. Hypatia wrote several learned treatises as well as devising inventions such as an astrolabe. She was murdered by a Christian mob opposed to the scientific rationalism advocated by her Neoplatonist philosophy.

hype^{1} /haɪp/ n. & v. colloq. ● n. 1 extravagant or intensive publicity promotion. 2 cheating; a trick. ● v.tr. 1 promote (a product) with extravagant publicity. 2 cheat, trick. [20th c.: orig. unkn.]

hype^{2} /haɪp/ n. sl. 1 a drug addict. 2 a hypodermic needle or injection. □ hyped up stimulated by or as if by a hypodermic injection. [abbr. of HYPODERMIC] hyper /ˈhaɪpə(r)/ adj. colloq. hyperactive, highly strung; extraordinarily energetic.

hyper- /ˈhaɪpə(r)/ prefix meaning: 1 over, beyond, above (hyperphysical). 2 exceeding (hypersonic). 3 excessively; above normal (hyperbole; hypersensitive; hyperinflation). [Gk huper over, beyond] hyperactive /ˌhaɪpərˈæktɪv/ adj. (of a person, esp. a child) abnormally active. □ hyperactivity /-ækˈtɪvɪtɪ/ n.

hyperaemia /ˌhaɪpərˈiːmɪə/ n. (US hyperemia) Med. an excessive quantity of blood in the vessels supplying an organ or other part of the body. □ hyperaemic adj. [mod.L (as HYPER-, -AEMIA)] hyperaesthesia /ˌhaɪpəriːsˈθiːzɪə/ n. (US hyperesthesia) Med. an excessive physical sensibility, esp. of the skin. □ hyperaesthetic /-ˈθetɪk/ adj. [mod.L (as HYPER-, Gk -aisthēsia f. aisthanomai perceive)] hyperbaric /ˌhaɪpəˈbærɪk/ adj. (of a gas) at a pressure greater than normal. [HYPER- + Gk barus heavy] hyperbaton /haɪˈpɜːbəˌton/ n. Rhet. the inversion of the normal order of words, esp. for the sake of emphasis (e.g. this I must see). [L f. Gk huperbaton (as HYPER-, bainō go)] hyperbola /haɪˈpɜːbələ/ n. (pl. hyperbolas or hyperbolae /-ˌliː/) Geom. the plane curve of two equal branches, produced when a cone is cut by a plane that makes a larger angle with the base than the side of the cone (cf. ELLIPSE). [mod.L f. Gk huperbolē excess (as HYPER-, ballō to throw)] hyperbole /haɪˈpɜːbəlɪ/ n. Rhet. an exaggerated statement not meant to be taken literally. □ hyperbolism n. hyperbolical /ˌhaɪpəˈbolɪk(ə)l/ adj. hyperbolically adv. [L (as HYPERBOLA)] hyperbolic /ˌhaɪpəˈbolɪk/ adj. Geom. of or relating to a hyperbola. □ hyperbolic function a function related to a rectangular hyperbola, e.g. a hyperbolic cosine.

hyperboloid /haɪˈpɜːbəˌlɔɪd/ n. Geom. a solid or surface having plane sections that are hyperbolas, ellipses, or circles. □ hyperboloidal /ˌhaɪpəbəˈlɔɪd(ə)l/ adj.

Hyperborean /ˌhaɪpəbɔːˈrɪən, -ˈbɔːrɪən/ n. Gk Mythol. a member of a fabled race worshipping Apollo and living in a land of sunshine and plenty 'beyond the north wind'.

hyperborean /ˌhaɪpəbɔːˈrɪən, -ˈbɔːrɪən/ n. & adj. ● n. an inhabitant of the extreme north of the earth. ● adj. of the extreme north of the earth. [LL hyperboreanus f. L hyperboreus f. Gk huperboreos (as HYPER-, Boreas god of the north wind)]

HyperCard /ˈhaɪpəˌkɑːd/ n. Computing propr. a programming system that uses symbols resembling index cards onscreen, permitting the creation of hypertext links. [HYPERTEXT + CARD^{1}] hypercholesterolaemia /ˌhaɪpəkəˌlestəroˈliːmɪə/ n. Med. an excess of cholesterol in the bloodstream. [HYPER- + CHOLESTEROL + -AEMIA] hyperconscious /ˌhaɪpəˈkonʃəs/ adj. (foll. by of) acutely or excessively aware.

hypercritical /ˌhaɪpəˈkrɪtɪk(ə)l/ adj. excessively critical, esp. of small faults. □ hypercritically adv.

hyperemia US var. of HYPERAEMIA.

hyperesthesia US var. of HYPERAESTHESIA.

hyperfocal distance /ˌhaɪpəˈfəʊk(ə)l/ n. the distance on which a camera lens can be focused to bring the maximum range of object-distances into focus.

hypergamy /haɪˈpɜːgəmɪ/ n. marriage to a person of equal or superior caste or class. [HYPER- + Gk gamos marriage]

hyperglycaemia /ˌhaɪpəglaɪˈsiːmɪə/ n. (US hyperglycemia) Med. an excess of glucose in the bloodstream, often associated with diabetes mellitus. □ hyperglycaemic adj. [HYPER- + GLYCO- + -AEMIA] hypergolic /ˌhaɪpəˈgolɪk/ adj. (of a rocket propellant) igniting spontaneously on contact with an oxidant etc. [G Hypergol (perh. as HYPO-, ERG^{1}, -OL)] hypericum /haɪˈperɪkəm/ n. a shrub or herbaceous plant of the genus Hypericum, with five-petalled yellow flowers. (See also ST JOHN'S WORT.) [L f. Gk hupereikon (as HYPER-, ereikē heath)]

Hyperion /haɪˈpɪərɪən/ 1 Gk Mythol. a Titan, son of Uranus (Heaven) and Gaia (Earth). 2 Astron. satellite VII of Saturn, the sixteenth closest to the planet, discovered in 1848. Its irregular shape suggests that it is a remnant of a larger body.

hyperkinesis /ˌhaɪpəkɪˈniːsɪs, -kaɪˈniːsɪs/ n. (also hyperkinesia /-ˈniːzɪə/) Med. 1 muscle spasm. 2 a disorder of children marked by hyperactivity and inability to attend. □ hyperkinetic /-ˈnetɪk/ adj. [HYPER- + Gk kinēsis motion] hypermarket /ˈhaɪpəˌmɑːkɪt/ n. Brit. a very large self-service store with a wide range of goods and extensive car-parking facilities, usu. outside a town. [transl. F hypermarché (as HYPER-, MARKET)] hypermedia /ˈhaɪpəˌmiːdɪə/ n. Computing an extension of hypertext allowing the provision of audio and video material cross-referenced to a computer text (often attrib.: hypermedia database). [HYPER- + MEDIA^1] hypermetropia /ˌhaɪpəmɪˈtrəʊpɪə/ n. Med. the condition of having long sight. □ hypermetropic /-ˈtrəʊpɪk, -ˈtropɪk/ adj. [mod.L f. HYPER- + Gk metron measure, ōps eye] hypernym /ˈhaɪpənɪm/ n. (in semantics) a word of more general meaning than, and therefore implied by or able to replace, other more specific terms; a superordinate (e.g. animal is a hypernym of lion and elephant) (cf. HYPONYM). [f. HYPER- after HYPONYM] hyperon /ˈhaɪpəˌron/ n. Physics an unstable baryon which is heavier than a nucleon. □ hyperonic /ˌhaɪpəˈronɪk/ adj. [HYPER-] hyperopia /ˌhaɪpəˈrəʊpɪə/ n. Med. = HYPERMETROPIA. □ hyperopic /-ˈropɪk/ adj. [mod.L f. HYPER- + Gk ōps eye]

hyperplasia /ˌhaɪpəˈpleɪzɪə/ n. Med. the enlargement of an organ or tissue from the increased production of cells. [HYPER- + Gk plasis formation] hypersensitive /ˌhaɪpəˈsensɪtɪv/ adj. 1 abnormally or excessively sensitive. 2 Med. having an abnormally strong, esp. allergic, reaction to a substance. □ hypersensitiveness n. hypersensitivity /-ˌsensɪˈtɪvɪtɪ/ n.

hypersonic /ˌhaɪpəˈsonɪk/ adj. 1 relating to speeds of more than five times the speed of sound (Mach 5). 2 relating to sound-frequencies above about 1,000 million hertz. □ hypersonically adv. [HYPER-, after SUPERSONIC, ULTRASONIC] hyperspace /ˈhaɪpəˌspeɪs/ n. space of more than three dimensions, esp. (in science fiction) a notional space–time continuum in which motion and communication at speeds greater than that of light are supposedly possible.

hypersthene /ˈhaɪpəˌsθiːn/ n. a rock-forming mineral, magnesium iron silicate, of greenish colour. [F hyperstène (as HYPER-, Gk sthenos strength, from its being harder than hornblende] hypertension /ˌhaɪpəˈtenʃ(ə)n/ n. 1 abnormally high blood pressure. 2 a state of great emotional tension. □ hypertensive /-ˈtensɪv/ adj.

- Hypnotic techniques were known in ancient times, but it was Franz Mesmer in the 18th century who popularized hypnosis in Europe, and, under the name of mesmerism, it enjoyed a vogue as a therapeutic technique. Some subjects under hypnosis seem able to recall memories (e.g. of childhood) that have apparently been forgotten, and the study of hypnosis seems to have influenced Sigmund Freud in his theories of the unconscious mind. Hypnotic suggestion has been used in psychotherapy, e.g. to treat addiction, but it is often distrusted because of its theatrical, mysterious, and exploitative aspects.

Illyria /ɪˈlɪrɪə/ an ancient region along the east coast of the Adriatic Sea, including Dalmatia and what is now Montenegro and northern Albania. It was subsequently the Roman province of Illyricum and was later divided into the provinces of Dalmatia and Pannonia. It was overrun by the Huns and the Visigoths between the 3rd and 5th centuries AD. The name was revived, as the Illyrian Provinces, in 1809 after Napoleon's defeat of the Austrians and the annexation of the region to France. The region was reclaimed by Austria in 1814, retaining its identity as the kingdom of Illyria until 1849. □ Illyrian adj. & n.

- Many of the imperial measures are of great antiquity, but until defined by Parliament they varied from place to place. Units of length include the mile and the yard as well as feet and inches; area of land is measured in acres. The basic unit of capacity is the gallon, divided into 8 pints, while 8 gallons make up a bushel (these units are larger than their counterparts in US measures). The basic unit of weight is the pound, divided into 16 ounces; the hundredweight is 112 pounds, and the ton is 20 hundredweight. A unit peculiar to Britain is the stone (14 pounds). Most of the imperial measures are being or have been replaced by the metric system.

impressionism /ɪmˈpreʃəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. 1 an artistic style or movement originating in France in the late 19th century, characterized by a concern with depicting the visual impression of the moment, esp. in terms of the shifting effect of light and colour. (See note below.) 2 a style of music or writing that seeks to describe a feeling or experience rather than achieve accurate depiction or systematic structure. □ impressionist n.

▪ The name and reputation of impressionism derive from eight exhibitions held in Paris in 1874–86. The term impressionist was coined by a critic as a derisory comment on Monet's Impression: soleil levant in 1874, and in the early years the movement was the object of much critical hostility. The artists were trying to move away from precise academic draughtsmanship and also away from the romantic notion that art should convey personal emotion; instead, they were interested in capturing momentary visual perception in an objective way, and in this they were strongly influenced by contemporary developments in photography. Their work is characterized by free, loose brushwork, a sense of the immediacy of the resultant image — the picture's 'unfinished' quality — as well as a complex interplay of light and colour; the subject-matter is typically landscape, although not exclusively so. Among the principal members of the group were Monet, Auguste Renoir, Camille Pissarro, Cézanne, Degas, and Alfred Sisley. The influence of impressionism was enormous, and it is often regarded as the most important artistic development of the 19th century.

Inca /ˈɪŋkə/ n. & adj. ● n. (pl. same or Incas) a member of a native people of the central Andes. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to the Incas. □ Incan adj. Incaic /ɪŋˈkeɪɪk/ adj. [Quechua, = lord, royal person]

- The Incas arrived in the valley of Cuzco *c.*1200. Their origin and early history are uncertain. In the first part of the 15th century they began a series of rapid conquests and a century later their power extended over most of modern Ecuador and Peru, large areas of Bolivia, and parts of Argentina and Chile. Their empire was highly centralized and governed by a despotic monarchy supported by an aristocratic bureaucracy, with Cuzco as its capital city and religious centre. They were skilled engineers, and built a network of roads; technology and architecture were highly developed despite the absence of wheeled vehicles and a system of writing, and many of their palaces, temples, fortifications, and irrigation systems survive. The empire was weakened by civil war in the early 16th century and fell to the invading Spaniards in the early 1530s. Quechua-speaking descendants of the Incas make up about half of Peru's population.

India /'ɪndɪə/ (called in Hindi Bharat) a country in southern Asia occupying the greater part of the Indian subcontinent; pop. (est. 1991) 859,200,000; official languages, Hindi, English; capital, New Delhi. Of the many other languages spoken in India, fourteen are recognized as official in certain regions; of these, Bengali, Gujarati, Marathi, Tamil, Telugu, and Urdu have most first-language speakers. The history of the subcontinent began in the 3rd millennium BC, when the Indus valley was the site of a fully developed civilization. This collapsed c.1760 BC, when Aryan invaders spread from the west through the northern part of the country. Consolidated first within the Buddhist empire of Asoka and then the Hindu empire of the Gupta dynasty, much of India was united under a Muslim sultanate based on Delhi from the 12th century until incorporated in the Mogul empire by Babur and Akbar the Great in the 16th century. The decline of Mogul power in the late 17th and early 18th centuries coincided with increasing European penetration, with Britain eventually triumphing over her colonial rivals. British interest had begun in the 17th century with the formation of the East India Company, which in 1765 acquired the right to administer Bengal and afterwards other parts (see BRITISH INDIA). In 1858, after the Indian Mutiny, the Crown took over the Company's authority, and in 1876 Queen Victoria was proclaimed Empress of India. Limited autonomy was granted under the provisions of the Government of India Act (1919); a system of diarchy was established whereby British governors headed provincial governments consisting of British-appointed councillors and Indian ministers selected by governors from locally elected officials. This system met with opposition, led by Mahatma Gandhi, and was replaced in 1935 by full provincial autonomy. However, rising nationalism eventually resulted in independence in 1947, at which time India was partitioned, Pakistan being created from mainly Muslim territories in the north-east (now Bangladesh) and the north-west. A member of the Commonwealth, India is the second most populous country in the world.

Indian Mutiny (also called Sepoy Mutiny) a revolt of Indians against British rule, 1857–8. At a time when the number of British troops in India had reached a low point and the ruling East India Company was almost totally dependent on Indian soldiers (sepoys), discontent with British administration resulted in widespread mutinies in British garrison towns, with accompanying massacres of white soldiers and inhabitants. After a series of sieges (most notably that of Lucknow) and battles, the revolt was put down; it was followed by the institution of direct rule by the British Crown in place of the East India Company administration.

Indian National Congress a broad-based political party in India, founded in 1885. It developed a powerful central organization under Mahatma Gandhi in the 1920s and dominated the independence movement in the following decade; it has been the principal party in government since independence in 1947. Following splits in the party the Indian National Congress (I), formed by Indira Gandhi as a breakaway group, was confirmed in 1981 as the official Congress party.

Indian Ocean the ocean to the south of India, extending from the east coast of Africa to the East Indies and Australia.

Indian subcontinent the part of Asia south of the Himalayas which forms a peninsula extending into the Indian Ocean, between the Arabian Sea and the Bay of Bengal. Historically forming the whole territory of greater India, the region is now divided between India, Pakistan, and Bangladesh. Geologically, the Indian subcontinent is a distinct unit, formerly part of the ancient supercontinent of Gondwana. As a result of continental drift it became joined to the rest of Asia, perhaps as recently as 40 million years ago, in a collision which created the Himalayas.

Indo-European /ˌɪndəʊˌjʊərəˈpɪən/ adj. & n. ● adj. of or relating to the family of languages spoken for at least the last 3,000 years over the greater part of Europe and extending into Asia as far as northern India. Also (now less usually) called Indo-Germanic or Aryan. (See note below.) ● n. 1 the Indo-European family of languages. 2 (usu. in pl.) a speaker of an Indo-European language, esp. the ancestral form.

- The Indo-European languages are thought to have originated in a language which has been called Proto-Indo-European, spoken at some distant time in the past, considerably before 2000 BC. No records of this language survive, but its existence can be inferred from a comparison of the Indo-European languages and most of its phonology and morphology and some of its vocabulary can be reconstructed at a theoretical level. The main divisions into which it eventually split are the Indo-Iranian branch, the Hellenic branch or Greek, the Italic branch (including Latin, from which came French and the other Romance languages), the Germanic languages (to which English belongs), the Celtic branch, the Baltic languages, and the Slavonic languages. In addition to these, Albanian forms a distinct member of the family, as does Armenian. Two important discoveries of the 20th century have added to the family the ancient Anatolian languages, such as Hittite (the oldest attested Indo-European language, dating from the 2nd millennium BC), and Tocharian. Recognition of the breadth of this language family came about when Sanskrit was first studied by Europeans in the late 18th and early 19th centuries and the strong affinity that it bore to Greek and Latin was noticed. Most of the research on which the language groupings and the reconstruction of the parent language are based was the work of German scholars in the 19th century.

Indonesia /ˌɪndəˈniːzɪə, -ˈniːʒə, -ˈniːʃə/ a SE Asian country consisting of many islands in the Malay Archipelago; pop. (est. 1990) 184,300,000; languages, Indonesian (official), Malay, Balinese, Chinese, Javanese, and others; capital, Djakarta (on Java). Indonesia consists of the territories of the former Dutch East Indies, of which the largest are Java, Sumatra, southern Borneo, western New Guinea, the Moluccas, and Sulawesi. Originally settled by Malayo-Polynesian peoples, Indonesia came under Hindu and Buddhist, and later Islamic, influence from India, especially in the west. By the 16th century, it was divided into small, often competing, territories under the control of local rulers. The European colonial powers rapidly became influential, with the Dutch establishing control by the late 17th century. The region was occupied by the Japanese in 1942. On liberation, Indonesia was proclaimed a republic by nationalists. After trying unsuccessfully to regain control, the Dutch agreed to Indonesian independence in 1949, although western New Guinea (Irian Jaya) was not handed over until 1963. In 1965 an attempted Communist coup (in which President Sukarno was said to have participated) was crushed by the army. Indonesia invaded East Timor in 1976, annexing it and claiming it as Indonesia's 27th state; there have since been allegations of mass killings in the region. The majority of Indonesia's population is Javanese, with Java the most densely populated of the country's islands. Since the mid-1980s the Indonesian government has attempted to relieve overcrowding in Java by encouraging transmigration to Irian Jaya and other less populated islands, a policy which has encountered much opposition from the islands' native inhabitants.

Indonesian /ˌɪndəˈniːzɪən, -ˈniːʒ(ə)n, -ˈniːʃ(ə)n/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a a native or national of Indonesia. b a person of Indonesian descent. 2 a member of the chief pre-Malay population of Indonesia and neighbouring islands. 3 the group of languages spoken in Indonesia and neighbouring islands, esp. the official language (also called Bahasa Indonesia) of Indonesia. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to Indonesia or its people or language(s).

- Indonesian is virtually the same language as Malay; the apparent differences are mainly due to the different spelling systems, the Indonesian one having been developed by the Dutch and the Malay by the British.

Indus /'ɪndəs/ a river of southern Asia, about 2,900 km (1,800 miles) in length, flowing from Tibet through Kashmir and Pakistan to the Arabian Sea. Along its valley an early civilization flourished from *c.*2600 to 1760 BC, with important centres at Mohenjo-Daro and Harappa, characterized by towns built on a grid-like plan with granaries, drainage systems, and public buildings, copper-bronze technology, a standard system of weights and measures, and steatite seals with hieroglyphic inscriptions, which remain undeciphered. This civilization's economic wealth was derived from well-attested sea and land trade with the rest of the Indian subcontinent, Afghanistan, the Persian Gulf, and Mesopotamia. In the early 2nd millennium its power declined, probably because of incursions by the Aryans.

Industrial Revolution the rapid development of a nation's industry, especially that which occurred in Britain in the second half of the 18th century and the first half of the 19th century, in which the bulk of the working population turned from agriculture to industry. Preceded by major changes in agricultural methods which freed workers for the factories, it was made possible by the rise of modern industrial methods, with steam power replacing the use of muscle, wind, and water, the growth of factories, and the mass production of manufactured goods. The textile industry was the prime example of industrialization, and created a demand for machines, and for tools for their manufacture, which stimulated further mechanization. Improved transport was needed, provided by canals, roads, railways, and steamships; construction of these required a large labour force, and the skills acquired were exported to other countries. It made Britain the most powerful industrial country in the world but radically changed the face of British society, throwing up large cities (particularly in the Midlands) as the population shifted from the countryside, and causing or exacerbating a series of profound social and economic problems.

Industrial Workers of the World (abbr. IWW) a radical US labour movement, popularly known as the Wobblies, founded in 1905 and, as part of the syndicalist movement, dedicated to the overthrow of capitalism. - The ancient Egyptians and Chinese made ink from lampblack mixed with gum or glue; such inks continued in use in medieval Europe.

Plant juices and other substances were also used as colouring-matter, especially an extract of tannin with a soluble iron salt. Oil-based printing inks were developed in the mid-15th century and used for over three hundred years. Synthetic dyes, developed in the 1860s, provided a better colouring-matter, chemical drying-agents appeared, and by the early 20th century ink-making for various purposes had become a complicated industrial process. Ball-point pens use an oil-based ink that dries almost instantly.

Inkatha /ɪn'kɑːtə/ (in full Inkatha Freedom Party; abbr. IFP) a mainly Zulu political party and organization in South Africa. It was founded in 1928 by the Zulu king Solomon as a cultural and social movement and revived by Chief Buthelezi in 1975. It has a professed aim of racial equality and universal franchise in South Africa, but progress towards political reform was obstructed by violent clashes between Inkatha factions and members of the rival ANC (an organization with a largely Xhosa membership) in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Inkatha participated in the general elections of April 1994, although it had previously threatened to boycott them amid its demands for Zulu autonomy. Winning 10.5 per cent of the vote, the party was allocated forty-three seats in the National Assembly, and three Cabinet posts. Inquisition, the an ecclesiastical court established by Pope Gregory IX *c.*1232 for the detection of heretics, at a time when certain heretical groups were regarded by the Church as enemies of society. It was active chiefly in northern Italy and southern France, becoming notorious for the use of torture; condemned heretics who refused to recant were handed over to the civil authorities and could be burned at the stake. In 1542 the papal Inquisition was reinstituted to combat Protestantism, eventually becoming an organ of papal government. The Spanish Inquisition was a separate body, established in 1478 and directed originally against converts from Judaism and Islam but later also against Protestants. It operated with great severity, especially under its first inquisitor, Torquemada, and was not suppressed until the early 19th century.

- Insects are the most numerous animals, with more than a million species described. They display great diversity of form and occur in all habitats except the sea, but all of them breathe air as adults. The insect body is divided into three sections – head, thorax, and abdomen – with the legs and wings borne on the thorax. Primitive wingless forms such as springtails and bristletails are sometimes considered not to be true insects. The more advanced forms have a complete metamorphosis, passing through distinct larval and pupal stages. Many are of great economic importance, some as pollinators of crops, or producers of honey or silk, others as pests of crops, or carriers of disease.

- Insurance was known in ancient Greece and among the maritime peoples with whom the Greeks traded. It developed first as a means of spreading the huge risks attendant on early maritime enterprises and dates as a distinct contract from the 14th century, when it evolved in the commercial cities of Italy. It is found in the Admiralty Court in England in the 16th century; life and fire insurance developed later. Lloyd's of London began in the 17th century, and the first US company was organized by Benjamin Franklin in 1752. Since the mid-19th century insurance against other kinds of risk has developed greatly. (See also ASSURANCE.)

internal-combustion engine /ɪnˌtɜːn(ə)lkəmˈbʌstʃən/ n. an engine which generates motive power by the burning of fuel with air inside the engine, the hot gases produced being used as the working fluid. Although the gas turbine, for example, is an internal-combustion engine, the term usually denotes diesel and petrol engines in which the exhaust gases are made to drive a piston as they expand. Internal-combustion engines were pioneered in the early 19th century, but it was not until the development of the four-stroke cycle by N. A. Otto and others in the late 19th century that they became sufficiently powerful and reliable to challenge the dominance of steam. The chief advantage of such engines over steam engines is their compactness; all processes take place in a single mechanism, giving a high output of power for a low weight. The disadvantage is the need for very specific types of liquid or gaseous fuels.

International /ˌɪntəˈnæʃ(ə)n(ə)l/ n. any of various international socialist organizations. The First International was formed by Karl Marx in London in 1864 as an international working men's association and was dissolved twelve years later after internal wrangling between Marxists and anarchists. The Second International was formed in Paris in 1889 to celebrate the 100th anniversary of the French Revolution and, although gravely weakened by the First World War, still survives as a loose association of social democrats. The Third International, also known as the Comintern, was formed by the Bolsheviks in 1919 to further the cause of world revolution. Active if seldom effective between the wars, it was abolished in 1943 as a gesture towards the Soviet Union's war allies. The Fourth International, a body of Trotskyist organizations, was formed in 1938 in opposition to the policies of the Stalin-dominated Third International.

Ipatieff /ɪˈpætɪˌef/, Vladimir Nikolaievich (1867–1952), Russian-born American chemist. He worked mainly on the catalysis of hydrocarbons, particularly the use of high-pressure catalysis and of metallic oxides as catalysts. These techniques became vitally important to the petrochemical industry, which he helped to establish in both pre- and post-revolutionary Russia. Ipatieff continued his research on catalysis after moving to the US in 1930.

IQ abbr. intelligence quotient, a number used to express a person's performance in intelligence tests. It represents the ratio of the subject's score to the statistical norm for a population group, an IQ of 100 being average. IQ has been the most widely used measure of intelligence, although how that should be defined is controversial and testing often involves cultural bias. The quotient was introduced by the German-born American psychologist William Louis Stern (1871–1938) in 1912.

Iqbal /ˈɪkbæl/, Sir Muhammad (1875–1938), Indian poet and philosopher, generally regarded as the father of Pakistan. Writing in both Persian and Urdu, he became a champion of an international Islamic community, eventually concluding that it could only find expression in the free association of Muslim states. As president of the Muslim League in 1930, he advocated the creation of a separate Muslim state in NW India; the demands of the Muslim League led ultimately to the establishment of Pakistan in 1947.

Iran /ɪˈrɑːn, ɪˈræn/ a country in the Middle East, between the Caspian Sea and the Persian Gulf; pop. (est. 1990) 54,600,000; languages, Farsi (Persian) (official), Azerbaijani, Kurdish, Arabic, and others; capital, Tehran. Previously known as Persia, the country adopted the name Iran in 1935. Iran was a monarchy until 1979, when the shah was overthrown in a popular uprising, headed by Ayatollah Khomeini, which led soon after to the establishment of an Islamic republic. From 1980 to 1988 Iran was involved in war with its neighbour Iraq (see IRAN–IRAQ WAR). (See also PERSIA.)

Irangate /ɪˈrɑːngeɪt, ɪˈræn-/ (also called Iran–Contra affair or Iran–Contra scandal) a US political scandal of 1987, during the presidency of Ronald Reagan. It involved the covert supplying by the US of arms to Iran, at a time when official relations between the countries were suspended (and while Iran was at war with Iraq), and the subsequent release of American hostages held in the Middle East. The proceeds of the arms sales were used by officials to supply arms to the anti-Communist Contras in Nicaragua, despite Congressional prohibition. [IRAN + -GATE]

Iran–Iraq War /ɪˌrɑːnɪˈrɑːk, ɪˌrænɪˈræk/ (also called Gulf War) the war of 1980–8 between Iran and Iraq in the general area of the Persian Gulf. It ended inconclusively after great loss of life on both sides.

Iraq /ɪˈrɑːk, ɪˈræk/ a country in the Middle East, on the Persian Gulf; pop. (est. 1988) 17,583,450; official language, Arabic; capital, Baghdad. Iraq is traversed by the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, whose valley was the site of the ancient civilizations of Mesopotamia. It was conquered by Arabia in the 7th century (by which time it had become known as Iraq) and from 1534 formed part of the Ottoman Empire. After the First World War a kingdom was established, although the country was under British administration until 1932. In 1958 the monarchy was overthrown in a coup and the country became a republic. Saddam Hussein came to power as President in 1979. The country was at war with its eastern neighbour Iran in 1980–8. In Aug. 1990, Iraq invaded Kuwait in an attempt to obtain that country's wealth and oilfields and to secure its own access to the Persian Gulf; it was expelled by an international coalition of forces in the Gulf War of 1991. In 1998 the country was bombed by US and UK aircraft, and in 2003 it was invaded by US-led forces in response to its failure to comply fully with a UN resolution that it should disarm.

Ireland /ˈaɪələnd/ an island of the British Isles, lying west of Great Britain. Approximately four-fifths of the area of Ireland forms the Republic of Ireland, with the remaining one-fifth forming Northern Ireland. Ireland was inhabited by Celts as early as the 6th century BC. Christianity reached Ireland probably by the 4th century, and in the Dark Ages the country was a leading cultural centre, with the monasteries fostering learning and missionary work. Irish Celtic society was based on clans, with a high king at Tara claiming nominal overlordship. English invasions began in the 12th century under Henry II, but English authority was largely confined to the Pale, around Dublin, until the Tudors succeeded in conquering the whole of the island. Revolts against English rule, and against the imposition of Protestantism, resulted in the Plantation of Ireland by English and Scottish families on confiscated land, in an attempt to anglicize the country and secure its allegiance. In parts of Ulster the descendants of Protestant settlers form a majority. After an unsuccessful rebellion in 1798, union of Britain and Ireland followed in 1801. A share of Britain's 19th-century industrial prosperity reached Protestant Ulster, but not the rest of the island. After the failure of the potato crop in the 1840s thousands died in a famine, and thousands more emigrated. In the late 19th century there was increasing agitation for Home Rule; a bill, passed in 1914, was not implemented because of the First World War. An armed uprising (see EASTER RISING) in Dublin at Easter, 1916, was suppressed. The Government of Ireland Act (1920) provided for two Irish Parliaments, one in the north and one in the south; the following year, in 1921, Ireland was partitioned by the Anglo-Irish Treaty, which gave dominion status to Ireland with the exception of six of the counties of Ulster (Northern Ireland), whose Protestant majority wished to preserve the union and which remained part of the United Kingdom. (For later history, see IRELAND, REPUBLIC OF and NORTHERN IRELAND.)

Ireland, Republic of (also Irish Republic) a country forming approximately four-fifths of Ireland; pop. (1991) 3,523,400; languages, Irish (official), English; capital, Dublin. The Republic of Ireland includes the three provinces of Munster, Leinster, and Connacht, and three of the counties of Ulster; until 1999 the constitution lay claim to the whole island. The Anglo-Irish Treaty of 1921 gave southern Ireland dominion status as the Irish Free State. The treaty was followed by civil war between the Free State government and republicans, led by Eamon de Valera, who rejected partition. The war ended in victory for the government in 1923. After de Valera became Prime Minister in 1932, the country began to sever its links with Britain. A new constitution as a sovereign state (Eire) was adopted in 1937. Eire was neutral during the Second World War; in 1949 the country left the Commonwealth and became fully independent as the Republic of Ireland. The Republic of Ireland joined the EEC in 1973. (See also EIRE.)

Irenaeus, St /ˌaɪərɪˈniːəs/ (AD *c.*130–*c.*200), Greek theologian. He became bishop of Lyons in Gaul in 177, and was the author of Against Heresies (*c.*180), a detailed attack on Gnosticism. Feast day, (in the Eastern Church) 23 Aug.; (in the Western Church) 28 June.

Irian Jaya /ˌɪrɪən ˈdʒaɪə/ (also West Irian) a province of eastern Indonesia comprising the western half of the island of New Guinea together with the adjacent small islands; capital, Jayapura. Until its incorporation into Indonesia in 1963 it was known as Dutch New Guinea.

iridaceous /ˌɪrɪˈdeɪʃəs/ adj. Bot. of or relating to the family Iridaceae of flowering plants growing from bulbs, corms, or rhizomes, e.g. iris, crocus, and gladiolus. [mod.L iridaceus (as IRIS)] iridescent /ˌɪrɪˈdes(ə)nt/ adj. 1 showing rainbow-like luminous or gleaming colours. 2 changing colour with position. □ iridescence n. iridescently adv. [L IRIS + -ESCENT] iridium /ɪˈrɪdɪəm/ n. a hard silvery-white metallic chemical element (atomic number 77; symbol Ir). A transition element and one of the platinum metals, iridium was discovered by the British chemist Smithson Tennant (1761–1815) in 1804. Iridium–platinum alloys are used in jewellery, electrical contacts, and other situations where hardness and resistance to corrosion are important; an alloy with osmium is used in fountain-pen nibs. Iridium is very rare in the earth's crust; relatively high levels of iridium in geological strata from the end of the Cretaceous period are interpreted as evidence of a major meteorite impact 65 million years ago. [L iris rainbow, from its forming compounds of many colours] iridology /ˌɪrɪˈdolədʒɪ/ n. (in alternative medicine) diagnosis by examination of the iris of the eye.

OE Iras the Irish]

- Irish belongs to the Celtic family of languages and is a distinct variety of Gaelic. It was brought to Ireland by Celtic invaders *c.*500 BC, and until the end of the 18th century was spoken by the great majority of the people, especially in areas other than the cities. Its earliest attestation is in inscriptions from the 4th century AD, written in the ogham script, and there has been a tradition of literature since the 6th century, with a large amount of material from the 9th to 19th centuries. In the 19th century English gained ground rapidly and Irish is now spoken regularly only in a few isolated areas in the west of Ireland. Since 1922 the Irish government has organized its revival and it is now taught in all state schools, but despite this active support and the establishment of Irish as an official language there are probably only about 120,000 people who use it on an everyday basis. It is the first official language of the Republic of Ireland (the second is English). A few English words are derived from Irish, e.g. banshee, blarney, galore, leprechaun, and Tory. (See also Gaelic.)

Irish Free State the name for southern Ireland from 1921, when it gained dominion status on the partition of Ireland, until 1937, when it became the sovereign state of Eire. (See Ireland, Republic of.)

Irish National Liberation Army (abbr. INLA) a small paramilitary organization seeking to achieve union between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. It was formed in the early 1970s, probably as an offshoot of the Provisional IRA.

Irish Republic see Ireland, Republic of.

Irish Republican Army (abbr. IRA) the military arm of Sinn Fein, formed during the struggle for independence from Britain in 1916–21, and aiming for union between the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland. After a bombing campaign in England in 1939 many IRA members were interned without trial during the Second World War. In 1969 the IRA split into Official and Provisional wings. The Official IRA became virtually inactive, while the Provisional IRA stepped up the level of violence against military and civilian targets in Northern Ireland, Britain, and Europe. In August 1994 the IRA declared a cease-fire which lasted for eighteen months; a new cease-fire was declared in July 1997.

- Iron is one of the most abundant elements, widely distributed throughout the earth's crust; the chief ores are haematite, magnetite, and siderite. It occurs in the free state in meteorites, and the earth's core is believed to consist largely of metallic iron and nickel. Iron is the most extensively used of all metals because of its properties of strength, ductility, malleability, and magnetism. Iron was known in Egypt *c.*3000 BC and became widely used in Europe between 1200 and 1000 BC (see Iron Age). In the modern world iron is mostly used in the form of steel, an alloy of purified iron with carbon and other materials. Other important forms of the metal are cast iron and wrought iron. Chemically a transition metal, iron is essential to many types of animal life as a constituent of haemoglobin. The symbol Fe is from the Latin ferrum.

Iron Age a period of prehistory when weapons and tools were made of iron, following the Bronze Age. The Hittites in Anatolia were working iron by *c.*1400 BC, although on a small scale. By the 12th–13th centuries BC its use had spread more widely; the Hebrews and Greeks knew it by 1000 BC, but it was not in use on a large scale until two centuries later. The application of the term ends, in Europe, at the Roman period. (See PREHISTORY.)

Islam /'ɪzlɑːm, -læm, ɪz'lɑːm/ n. the religion of the Muslims, a monotheistic faith regarded as revealed through Muhammad as the prophet of Allah. Founded in the Arabian peninsula in the 7th century AD, Islam is now the professed faith of nearly 1,000 million people worldwide, particularly in North Africa, the Middle East, and parts of Asia. To be a Muslim means both to affirm an individual surrender to God and to live as a member of a social community. The Muslim performs prescribed acts of worship and strives to fulfil good works within the group; expected duties (the Five Pillars of Islam) include profession of the faith in a prescribed form, observance of ritual prayer (five obligatory prayer sequences each day as well as non-obligatory prayers), giving alms to the poor, fasting during the month of Ramadan, and performing the pilgrimage (hajj) to Mecca. Prayer takes place in a mosque and is led by an imam; there is no organized priesthood, although respect is given to holy men and to the descendants of Muhammad. The ritual observances of Islam, as well as a code governing social behaviour, were said to have been given to Muhammad as a series of revelations, which were codified in the Koran. They are supplemented by the deeds and discourse of the prophet, as collected in the Hadith. Islam is regarded by its adherents as the last of the revealed religions (following Judaism and Christianity), and Muhammad is seen as the last of the prophets, building on and perfecting the examples and teachings of Abraham, Moses, and Jesus. There are two major branches in Islam, Sunni and Shia, and other schools including the mystical movement of Sufism. Islamic fundamentalism n. the belief that the revitalization of Islamic societies can come about only through a return to the fundamental principles and practices of early Islam. Although often regarded as a modern phenomenon, Islamic fundamentalism appeared in the 18th and 19th centuries in the form of a number of differing revivalist movements, which emerged in the face of the disintegration of Islamic political and economic power and the ascendancy of the West. In the 20th century fundamentalist groups became active in Egypt, Afghanistan, Pakistan, Sudan, and elsewhere, many gaining impetus from the 1979 revolution in Iran, which brought Ayatollah Khomeini to power. Such groups are characterized by the view that religion is central to both state and society and by advocacy of a return to a life patterned on the 7th-century community established by Muhammad at Medina, governed by the sharia (Islamic law) and supported if need be by jihad or holy war. Literal interpretation of the Koran and close observance of the penal code contained in the sharia are stressed, at least partially because of their importance in symbolizing cultural identity and resistance to westernization.

Islamic Jihad /dʒɪ'hæd, -'hɑːd/ (also Jehad) a Muslim fundamentalist terrorist group within the Shiite Hezbollah association. The group was involved in the holding of some Western hostages in Lebanon in the 1980s. [see JIHAD]

Ismaili /ɪz'maɪlɪ, ˌɪzmɑː'iːlɪ/ n. a member of a Shiite Muslim branch that seceded from the main group in the 8th century over the question of succession to the position of imam, upholding the claims of Ismail as the seventh imam, from whom the sect takes its name. The Ismaili movement developed an elaborate esoteric doctrine which diverged considerably from the rest of Islam and was organized as a hierarchical secret society. It eventually split into many sects, of which the best known is the Nizari sect, headed by the Aga Khan. Today Ismailis are found especially in India, Pakistan, and East Africa, with smaller groups in Syria, Iran, and some other countries.

Israel^1 /'ɪzreɪəl/ 1 (also children of Israel) the Hebrew nation or people. According to tradition they are descended from the patriarch Jacob (his alternative name was Israel), whose twelve sons became founders of the twelve tribes. 2 the northern kingdom of the Hebrews (*c.*930–721 BC), formed after the reign of Solomon, whose inhabitants were carried away to captivity in Babylon. (See also JUDAH 3.) [Heb. yisrā'ēl he that strives with God; see Gen. 32:28]

Israel^2 /'ɪzreɪəl/ a country in the Middle East, on the Mediterranean Sea; pop. (est. 1990) 4,600,000; languages, Hebrew (official), English, Arabic; capital (not recognized as such by the UN), Jerusalem. The modern state of Israel was established as a Jewish homeland in 1948, on land that was at that time part of the British mandated territory of Palestine. Jewish settlement in the area had increased greatly during the Nazi persecution of the 1930s and 1940s. Britain had supported the creation of such a state in the Balfour Declaration of 1917, and the United Nations had voted for it in 1947. Israel was immediately attacked by the surrounding Arab states, which it defeated. The continuing conflict with the neighbouring Arabs, mainly over the rights of the Palestinian Arabs displaced from their homes or living under Israeli rule, has caused continual tension and intermittent terrorist and military activity. Further wars occurred in 1956, 1967, and 1973, which resulted in Israeli occupation of eastern Jerusalem, the West Bank, the Gaza Strip, and the Golan Heights. In 1993 Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization signed an agreement for limited Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and the Gaza Strip. (See also PALESTINE.) □ Israeli /ɪz'reɪlɪ/ adj. & n.

Italy /'ɪtəlɪ/ (Italian Italia /i'taːlja/) a country in southern Europe; pop. (est. 1990) 57,746,160; official language, Italian; capital, Rome. Mainland Italy forms a peninsula extending south from the Alps into the Mediterranean Sea. There are also several offshore islands, of which the largest are Sicily and Sardinia. Italy was united under Rome from the 1st century BC to the collapse of the empire in AD 476. In the Middle Ages, it was dominated by several city-states and the papacy, and was the centre of the Renaissance. Modern Italy was created by the nationalist movement of the mid-19th century, led by Garibaldi and the kingdom of Sardinia; the Sardinian monarch, Victor Emmanuel II, became king of Italy in 1861. Italy entered the First World War on the Allied side in 1915. In 1922, the country was taken over by the Fascist dictator Mussolini; participation in support of Germany during the Second World War resulted in defeat and Mussolini's downfall. A republic was established by popular vote in 1946. The postwar period brought sustained economic growth, particularly in the north of the country, but also political instability and frequent changes of government. In 1993 the electoral system of proportional representation was replaced by a 'first past the post' method for three-quarters of parliamentary seats, and the political establishment was discredited following revelations of widespread corruption. Italy was a founder member of the EEC.

Ivan /ˈaɪv(ə)n/ the name of six rulers of Russia, notably:

Ivan I (*c.*1304–41), grand duke of Muscovy 1328–40. He strengthened and enlarged the duchy, making Moscow the ecclesiastical capital in 1326.

Ivan III (known as Ivan the Great) (1440–1505), grand duke of Muscovy 1462–1505. He consolidated and enlarged his territory, defending it against a Tartar invasion in 1480, and adopting the title of 'Ruler of all Russia' in 1472.

Ivan IV (known as Ivan the Terrible) (1530–84), grand duke of Muscovy 1533–47 and first tsar of Russia 1547–84. His expansionist foreign policy resulted in the capture of Kazan (1552), Astrakhan (1556), and Siberia (1581). However, the Tartar siege of Moscow (1572) and Ivan's defeat by the Poles in the Livonian War (1558–82) left Russia weak and divided. He grew increasingly unpredictable and tyrannical; in 1581, he killed his eldest son Ivan in a fit of rage, the succession passing to his retarded second son Fyodor.

Jamaica /dʒəˈmeɪkə/ an island country in the Caribbean Sea, south-east of Cuba; pop. (est. 1990) 2,500,000; official language, English; capital, Kingston. Visited by Columbus in 1494, Jamaica was colonized by the Spanish, who enslaved or killed the native people. Both the Spanish and the British, who took the island by force in 1655, imported slaves, mainly to work on sugar plantations. In the 17th century, Jamaica was a base for buccaneers preying on Spanish interests. British colonial rule was threatened by popular violence in the mid-19th century which led to the suspension of representative government for two decades. Self-government was achieved in 1944, and in 1962 Jamaica became an independent Commonwealth state. □ Jamaican adj. & n.

James^1 /dʒeɪmz/ the name of seven Stuart kings of Scotland:

James I (1394–1437), son of Robert III, reigned 1406–37. Captured by the English while a child, James remained a captive until 1424. He returned to a country divided by baronial feuds, but managed to restore some measure of royal authority. He was murdered in Perth by rebel nobles.

James II (1430–60), son of James I, reigned 1437–60. After ascending the throne as a minor, he eventually overthrew his regents and considerably strengthened the position of the Crown by crushing the powerful Douglas family (1452–5). He was killed during the siege of Roxburgh Castle.

James III (1451–88), son of James II, reigned 1460–88. He proved increasingly unable to control his nobles, who eventually raised an army against him in 1488, using his son, the future James IV, as a figurehead. The king was defeated and killed in battle at Sauchieburn near Stirling.

James IV (1473–1513), son of James III, reigned 1488–1513. He re-established royal power throughout the realm, notably in the Highlands. He took an active part in European alliance politics, forging a dynastic link with England through his marriage to Margaret Tudor, the daughter of Henry VII, and revitalizing the traditional pact with France. When England and France went to war in 1513, he supported the latter and invaded England at the head of a large army. He died along with many of his nobles when his army was defeated at Flodden.

James V (1512–42), son of James IV, reigned 1513–42. Both during his long minority and after his marriage to the French noblewoman, Mary of Guise, Scotland was dominated by French interests. Relations with England deteriorated in the later years of his reign, culminating in an invasion by Henry VIII's army and the defeat of James's troops near the border at Solway Moss in 1542.

James VI (1566–1625), James I of England (1603–25): see JAMES^{2}.

James VII the Scottish title of James II of England.

James^{2} /dʒeɪmz/ the name of two kings of England, Ireland, and Scotland:

James I (1566–1625), son of Mary, Queen of Scots, king of Scotland (as James VI) 1567–1625, and of England and Ireland 1603–25. After his minority ended in 1583, he was largely successful in restoring royal authority in Scotland. He inherited the throne of England on the death of Elizabeth I, as great-grandson of Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII. His declaration of the divine right of kings, his favouritism towards the Duke of Buckingham, and his intended alliance with Spain made him unpopular with Parliament. He was succeeded by his second son, Charles I.

James II (1633–1701), son of Charles I, king of England, Ireland, and (as James VII) Scotland 1685–8. His Catholic beliefs led to the rebellion of the Duke of Monmouth in 1685 and to his deposition in favour of William of Orange and Mary II three years later. Attempts to regain the throne resulted in James's defeat at the Battle of the Boyne in 1690. He died in exile in France, leaving the Jacobite claim to the throne in the hands of his son, James Stuart.

James^{3} /dʒeɪmz/, C(yril) L(ionel) R(obert) (1901–89), Trinidadian historian, journalist, political theorist, and novelist. After working as a cricket columnist, he established a reputation as a historian with his study of the Haitian revolution, Black Jacobins (1938). A Trotskyist from 1934, he wrote a number of political works, including World Revolution: 1917–1936 (published in 1937). He is also noted for Beyond a Boundary (1963), an analysis of cricket and anti-colonialism.

James^{4} /dʒeɪmz/, Henry (1843–1916), American-born British novelist and critic. He settled in England in 1876, and in his early novels wrote about the relationship between European civilization and American life, notably in The Portrait of a Lady (1881). In The Bostonians (1886) he portrayed American society in its own right, before producing many novels of English life. He is also remembered for his ghost story The Turn of the Screw (1898), the subject of Benjamin Britten's opera by the same name (1954). He was the brother of William James.

James^{5} /dʒeɪmz/, Jesse (Woodson) (1847–82), American outlaw. He joined with his brother Frank (1843–1915) and others to form a notorious band of outlaws which specialized in bank and train robberies and inspired many westerns.

James^{6} /dʒeɪmz/, Dame P(hyllis) D(orothy) (b.1920), English writer of detective fiction. She is noted for her novels featuring the poet-detective Adam Dalgleish, including Death of an Expert Witness (1977) and A Taste for Death (1986).

James^{7} /dʒeɪmz/, William (1842–1910), American philosopher and psychologist. Influenced by C. S. Peirce, James was a leading exponent of pragmatism, who sought a functional definition of truth rather than a depiction of a structural relation between ideas and reality. Major works include The Will to Believe (1907) and Essays in Radical Empiricism (1912). In psychology, he is credited with introducing the concept of the stream of consciousness. He was the brother of Henry James.

James, St^{1} (known as St James the Great), an Apostle, son of Zebedee and brother of John. He was put to death by Herod Agrippa I; afterwards, according to a Spanish tradition, his body was taken to Santiago de Compostela. Feast day, 25 July.

James, St^{2} (known as St James the Less), an Apostle. Feast day (in the Eastern Church) 9 Oct.; (in the Western Church) 1 May.

James, St^{3} 1 (known as St James the Just or 'the Lord's brother'), leader of the early Christian Church at Jerusalem. He was put to death by the Sanhedrin. Feast day, 1 May. 2 the epistle of the New Testament traditionally ascribed to St James.

James Bay a shallow southern arm of Hudson Bay, Canada. It was discovered in 1610 by Henry Hudson but was later named after Captain Thomas James (*c.*1593–*c.*1635), who explored the region in 1631.

Jameson Raid /ˈdʒeɪms(ə)n/ an abortive raid into Boer territory made in 1895–6 by pro-British extremists led by Dr L. S. Jameson in an attempt to incite an uprising among recent, non-Boer immigrants. The raid seriously heightened tension in South Africa and contributed to the eventual outbreak of the Second Boer War.

Jamestown /ˈdʒeɪmstaʊn/ 1 a British settlement established in Virginia in 1607, during the reign of King James I. Jansen /ˈdʒæns(ə)n/, Cornelius Otto (1585–1638), Flemish Roman Catholic theologian and founder of Jansenism. A strong opponent of the Jesuits, he proposed a reform of Christianity through a return to St Augustine. To this end he produced his major work, Augustinus (1640), which was published by his followers after his death. The four-volume study followed St Augustine's teachings on grace, predestination, and free will, and formed the basis of Jansenism.

Jansenism /ˈdʒænsəˌnɪz(ə)m/ n. a Christian movement of the 17th and 18th centuries, based on the writings of Jansen and characterized by general harshness and moral rigour. Jap /dʒæp/ n. & adj. colloq. often offens. = JAPANESE. [abbr.]

Japan /dʒəˈpæn/ a country in eastern Asia, occupying a festoon of islands in the Pacific roughly parallel with the east coast of the Asiatic mainland; pop. (est. 1988) 122,626,000; official language, Japanese; capital, Tokyo. According to Japanese tradition the islands were brought together in 660 BC by the first emperor, Jimmu. After a long period of courtly rule centred on Kyoto, from the 12th century onwards the country was dominated by succeeding clans of warriors. With the restoration of imperial authority in 1867, Japan began a modernizing process which eventually made it into a major world power. This process was accelerated by wars against China (1894–5) and Russia (1904–5), and Japan fought on the Allied side in the First World War. After the war Japan adopted more militarist and expansionist policies, occupying Manchuria in 1931 and launching a full-scale invasion of China in 1937. In 1936 an alliance was formed with Germany and later with Italy. Japan entered the Second World War in 1941 with a surprise attack on Pearl Harbor and offensives in SE Asia. Their advance was eventually halted by the Allies, and Japan surrendered in 1945 after the dropping of atom bombs by the US on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Under American occupation, Japan became a constitutional monarchy in 1946, the emperor Hirohito renouncing divine status. Japan is now the most highly industrialized country and the leading economic power in the region, with a range of manufacturing industries that includes electrical goods, motor vehicles, chemicals, and shipping. The Japanese name of the country is Nippon, literally 'rising sun'; Japan is a rendering of the Chinese form Riben.

- Japanese contains many Chinese loan-words and has no genders, no article, and no number in nouns or verbs. It is written vertically, in a system that is partly ideographic and partly syllabic. The ideographs (known as kanji) were adopted from the Chinese in the early centuries of the Christian era and designate the chief meaningful elements of the language. They are supplemented by two groups of syllabic characters (kana), known as hiragana and katakana, for the agglutinative and inflectional endings. The exact relationship between Japanese and other languages is not clear, although it is almost certainly related to Korean, and possibly to the Altaic languages.

▪ Jazz was developed in the southern US early in the 20th century, blending West African rhythms with elements from ragtime, brass bands, spirituals, blues, and work-songs. Brass and woodwind instruments and piano are particularly associated with jazz, although guitar and occasionally violin are also used. In its earliest form – Dixieland – jazz was played by small groups, such as those led by Jelly Roll Morton and Louis Armstrong. During the 1920s bands became larger, leading to the swing of the 1930s, which emphasized pre-arranged orchestrations, as exemplified by the music of Benny Goodman. In the early 1940s the bebop of players like Dizzy Gillespie, Charlie Parker, and Thelonious Monk marked a return to smaller groups, playing complex melodies with extreme syncopation. More recent developments have included modal and atonal experimentation, notably by John Coltrane and Miles Davis, and attempts to fuse jazz with classical or rock music.

Jazz Age the 1920s in the US characterized as a period of carefree hedonism, wealth, freedom, and youthful exuberance, reflected in the novels of writers such as F. Scott Fitzgerald.

Jerusalem /dʒə'ruːsələm/ the holy city of the Jews, sacred also to Christians and Muslims, lying in the Judaean hills about 30 km (20 miles) from the River Jordan; pop. (1987) 482,700. In early biblical times it was a Canaanite stronghold, captured by King David (*c.*1000 BC), who made it the capital of the Jewish state. After the building of the Temple by Solomon (957 BC) it became a religious as well as a political capital. Since then it has shared the troubled history of the area – destroyed by the Babylonians in 586 BC and by the Romans in AD 70, refounded by Hadrian as a Gentile city (AD 135) under the name of Aelia Capitolina, destroyed again by the Persians in 614, and fought over by Saracens and Crusaders in the Middle Ages. From 1099 it was the capital of a Crusader kingdom, which persisted as a political entity until 1291, even though Jerusalem itself was captured by Saladin in 1187. Suleiman the Magnificent rebuilt its walls (1542). From 1947 the city was divided between the states of Israel and Jordan until the Israelis occupied the whole city in June 1967. Its Christian history begins with the short ministry of Christ, culminating in the Crucifixion. For Muslims Jerusalem is the holiest city after Mecca and Medina, containing the Dome of the Rock, one of Islam's most sacred sites. After the Second World War it was envisaged by the United Nations as an international city, but was seized by Israel during the Six Day War of 1967 and proclaimed the capital of the state of Israel. jet propulsion n. ejection of a high-speed jet of gas (or liquid) as a source of propulsive power, especially for aircraft. Simple examples are the movement of a deflating balloon, and of squids and other cephalopods, which propel themselves by expelling water through a funnel from the mantle cavity. The principle of jet propulsion for aircraft was discussed in the 1860s, but its successful application awaited the development of the turbojet – a form of gas turbine – concurrently by Frank Whittle in England and Hans von Ohain (b.1911) in Germany. The first jet aeroplane flew in Germany in 1939. Developments of the turbojet include the turboprop (in which the turbine drives a propeller), and the turbofan (in which thrust is augmented by a fan which drives air backwards around the engine proper). Some use has been made of the ramjet, a very simple engine with no moving parts, efficient only at high speeds.

▪ Jewish identity is a complex blend of racial and religious affiliation which has persisted through the many centuries of the Jewish

Diaspora. The term Jew may be applied to those of Hebrew descent (traditionally through the mother) even if they have abandoned the practice of Judaism, but also to other groups, such as the Falashas, who profess Judaism. The two main cultural divisions of European Jews are the Ashkenazim and the Sephardim. Jewish identity finds political expression in Zionism, and in the state of Israel, established as a Jewish homeland in 1948. (See also ANTI-SEMITISM, JUDAISM.)

John^{1} /dʒɒn/ (known as John Lackland) (1165–1216), son of Henry II, king of England 1199–1216. He lost Normandy and most of his French possessions to Phillip II of France by 1205. His refusal to accept Stephen Langton as Archbishop of Canterbury caused an interdict to be placed on England in 1208, and led to his own excommunication the following year. In 1215 John was forced to sign Magna Carta by his barons. When he ignored its provisions, civil war broke out and he died on campaign.

John^{2} /dʒon/ the name of six kings of Portugal, notably:

John I (known as John the Great) (1357–1433), reigned 1385–1433. Reinforced by an English army, he won independence for Portugal with his victory over the Castilians at Aljubarrota (1385). He established an Anglo-Portuguese alliance (1386), married a daughter of John of Gaunt (1387), and presided over a long period of peace and prosperity which was notable for his encouragement of voyages of discovery.

John IV (known as John the Fortunate) (1604–56), reigned 1640–56. The founder of the Braganza dynasty, he expelled a Spanish usurper and proclaimed himself king. He defeated the Spanish at Montijo (1644) and drove the Dutch out of Brazil (1654).

John^{3} /dʒon/, Augustus (Edwin) (1878–1961), Welsh painter. He is perhaps best known for The Smiling Woman (1908), a portrait of his second wife Dorelia, which portrayed a robust gypsy type of beauty; the gypsies of Wales were frequent subjects of his work. He was subsequently noted for his portraits of prominent writers such as Thomas Hardy, George Bernard Shaw, W. B. Yeats, James Joyce, and Dylan Thomas. He was the brother of Gwen John.

John^{4} /dʒon/, Barry (b.1945), Welsh Rugby Union player. His international career, during which he played at half-back and scored a record ninety points for his country, lasted from 1966 until his retirement in 1972. He played a prominent part in the British Lions' victorious tour of New Zealand in 1971.

John^{5} /dʒon/, Sir Elton (Hercules) (born Reginald Kenneth Dwight) (b.1947), English pop and rock singer, pianist, and songwriter. He has written many hit songs, the majority of them with lyricist Bernie Taupin (b.1950); they include 'Your Song' (1970) and 'Nikita' (1985). In 1997 his tribute to Diana, Princess of Wales, a new version of 'Candle in the Wind', became the highest-selling single in history.

John^{6} /dʒɒn/, Gwen (1876–1939), Welsh painter. After studying with Whistler in Paris (1898), she settled in France and worked as Rodin's model (1904), becoming his devoted friend and mistress. She converted to Catholicism in 1913; her paintings, mainly watercolours, often depict nuns or girls in interior settings and are noted for their grey tonality. She was the sister of Augustus John.

John of Damascus, St (*c.*675–*c.*749), Syrian theologian and Doctor of the Church. After championing image worship against the iconoclasts, he wrote his encyclopedic work on Christian theology, The Fount of Wisdom. Its last section summarized the teachings of the Greek Fathers of the Church on the principal mysteries of the Christian faith and was influential for centuries in both Eastern and Western Churches. Feast day, 4 Dec.

John of Gaunt /gɔːnt/ (1340–99), son of Edward III. Born in Ghent, he was created Duke of Lancaster in 1362. John of Gaunt headed the government during the final years of his father's reign and the minority of Richard II, and was effective ruler of England in this period. His son Henry Bolingbroke later became King Henry IV.

John of the Cross, St (born Juan de Yepis y Alvarez) (1542–91), Spanish mystic and poet. A Carmelite monk and priest, he joined with St Teresa of Ávila in trying to reassert the original Carmelite observance of austerity, and in 1568 founded the 'discalced' Carmelite order for monks. He also wrote mystical poems including 'The Dark Night of the Soul', describing the soul's purgation. Feast day, 14 Dec.

John o'Groats /ə'grəʊts/ a village at the extreme NE point of the Scottish mainland. It is said to be named from a house built there in the 16th century by a Dutchman, Jan Groot. (Cf. LAND'S END.)

John Paul II (born Karol Jozef Wojtyla) (b.1920), Polish cleric, pope since 1978. The first non-Italian pope since 1522, he has travelled abroad extensively during his papacy, especially in Central and South America. He has upheld the Church's traditional opposition to artificial means of contraception and abortion, as well as condemning homosexuality, the ordination of women, and the relaxation of the rule of celibacy for priests. He has also discouraged priests from taking part in political activity.

Johns /dʒonz/, Jasper (b.1930), American painter, sculptor, and printmaker. A key figure in the development of pop art, he rebelled against abstract expressionism and depicted commonplace and universally recognized images such as the US flag. He is best known for his Flags, Targets, and Numbers series produced in the mid-1950s; in these, he was noted for his use of encaustic (wax-based) paint. In the late 1950s he produced sculptures of such objects as beer cans and light bulbs cast in bronze.

Johnson¹ /'dʒons(ə)n/, Amy (1903–41), English aviator. In 1930 she became the first woman to fly solo to Australia, although her time of 19½ days was three days short of the record. She later set a record with her solo flight to Tokyo (1931) and broke the solo-flight record to Cape Town (1932). She joined the Auxiliary Air Force in 1939, but was lost when her plane disappeared in a flight over the Thames estuary.

Johnson² /'dʒons(ə)n/, Andrew (1808–75), American Democratic statesman, 17th President of the US 1865–9. His lenient policy towards the southern states after the American Civil War brought him into bitter conflict with the Republican majority in Congress, who impeached him (1868); he was acquitted by a single vote.

Johnson³ /'dʒons(ə)n/, Cornelius (also Jansens /'dʒæns(ə)nz/ or Janssen van Ceulen /ˌdʒæns(ə)n væn 'kɜːlən/) (1593–*c.*1661), English-born Dutch portrait painter. He painted for the court of Charles I, where he was influenced by Van Dyck and became noted for his individual portrait heads. After the outbreak of the English Civil War he emigrated to Holland (1643).

Johnson⁴ /'dʒons(ə)n/, Jack (1878–1946), American boxer. In 1908 he took the world heavyweight title, becoming the first black holder of the title; he retained it until 1915.

Johnson⁵ /'dʒons(ə)n/, Lyndon Baines (known as 'LBJ') (1908–73), American Democratic statesman, 36th President of the US 1963–9. His administration continued the programme of social and economic reform initiated by John F. Kennedy, passing the 1964 and 1965 Civil Rights Acts and legislating to reduce taxation. However, the increasing involvement of the US in the Vietnam War undermined his popularity and he refused to seek re-election.

Johnson⁶ /'dʒons(ə)n/, Samuel (known as Dr Johnson) (1709–84), English lexicographer, writer, critic, and conversationalist. His principal works include his Dictionary of the English Language (1755), one of the first to use illustrative quotations, his edition of Shakespeare (1765), and The Lives of the English Poets (1777). A leading figure in the literary London of his day, he formed the Literary Club (1764), which numbered Edmund Burke, Oliver Goldsmith, Sir Joshua Reynolds, David Garrick, and Johnson's biographer Boswell among its members.

Jordan /'dʒɔ:d(ə)n/ 1 a river flowing southward for 320 km (200 miles) from the Anti-Lebanon mountains through the Sea of Galilee into the Dead Sea. John the Baptist baptized Christ in the River Jordan. It is regarded as sacred not only by Christians but also by Jews and Muslims. 2 (in full Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan), a country in the Middle East east of the River Jordan; pop. (est. 1990) 4,000,000; official language, Arabic; capital, Amman. Romans, Arabs, and Crusaders dominated the area successively until it fell under Turkish rule in the 16th century. In 1916 the land east of the River Jordan was made a British protectorate, the Amirate of Transjordan; this became independent in 1946 and changed its name to the Hashemite Kingdom of Jordan in 1949. The country is almost completely landlocked, its only outlet to the sea being the port of Aqaba at the north-eastern end of the Red Sea. During the war of 1948–9 following the establishment of the state of Israel the Jordanians took over a large area on the west bank of the river, but were driven out by Israel in the Six Day War of 1967 (see West Bank); many Palestinian refugees then entered the country, and the Palestine Liberation Organization maintained its headquarters there until it was expelled following the short civil war of 1970. Jordan supported Iraq in the Gulf War of 1991, but has since repudiated this policy; a peace treaty with Israel was signed in 1994, ending an official state of war between the two countries. □ Jordanian /dʒɔ:'deɪmən/ adj. & n.

Joule /dʒu:l/, James Prescott (1818–89), English physicist. Experimenting in his private laboratory and at the family's brewery, he established that all forms of energy were basically the same and interchangeable – the basic principle of what is now called the first law of thermodynamics. Among other things, he measured the thermal effects of an electric current due to the resistance of the wire, establishing the law governing this. In 1852 he and William Thomson, later Lord Kelvin, discovered the fall in temperature when gases expand (the Joule–Thomson effect), which led to the development of the refrigerator and to the science of cryogenics.

joule /dʒu:l/ n. Physics the SI unit of work or energy (symbol: J), equal to 10^7 erg. One joule is the work done by a force of one newton when the point of application of the force moves one metre along its direction of action. [Joule]

Joule–Thomson effect /dʒu:l'toms(ə)n/ n. Physics the change of temperature of a gas when it is allowed to expand without doing any external work. Joyce /dʒɔɪs/, James (Augustine Aloysius) (1882–1941), Irish writer. He left Ireland in 1904 and thereafter lived in Trieste, Zurich, and Paris, becoming one of the most important writers of the modernist movement. His first major publication was Dubliners (1914), a collection of short stories depicting his native Dublin, which was followed by the semi-autobiographical novel A Portrait of the Artist as a Young Man (1914–15). His novel Ulysses (published in Paris in 1922 but banned in the UK and the US until 1936) revolutionized the form and structure of the modern novel and influenced the development of the stream of consciousness technique. Finnegans Wake (1939) pushed linguistic experimentation to the extreme.

Judaism /'dʒuːdeɪˌɪz(ə)m/ n. the religion of the Jews, a monotheistic faith having a basis in Mosaic and rabbinical teachings. Judaism was founded, according to the Bible, on the covenant made between God and Abraham, which ordained the Jewish people's special relationship with God. The first five books of the Bible, the Torah (or Pentateuch), reveal God's laws; next in importance to these is the Talmud, comprising the Mishnah and the Gemara. Judaism is a religion of much ritual, centred on the synagogue, although the home is also of great importance. The central time for worship is the sabbath (sunset on Friday to sunset on Saturday), while among annual festivals the most important are Yom Kippur, Hanukkah, Rosh Hashana, and Passover. □ Judaist n. [ME f. Julian calendar n. a calendar introduced under the authority of Julius Caesar in 46 BC and used in most of Christian Europe until its replacement by the Gregorian calendar from 1582, although retained in Russia until 1918. The Julian calendar instituted the modern system in which the ordinary year has 365 days and every fourth year is a leap year of 366 days. After some initial problems, an adjusted version of the calendar was instituted in 8 AD, in which the months had their modern lengths. Dates reckoned by the Julian calendar are sometimes designated 'Old Style'. (See also GREGORIAN CALENDAR.)

Julian of Norwich (*c.*1342–*c.*1413), English mystic. Her name probably derives from St Julian's Church, Norwich, outside which she is said to have lived as a religious recluse. She is chiefly associated with the Revelations of Divine Love (*c.*1393), which describe a series of visions she had at the end of a serious illness in 1373. In her account, she affirms the love of God and depicts the Holy Trinity as Father, Mother, and Lord.

Julius Caesar /,dʒu:lɪəs 'si:zə(r)/, Gaius (100–44 BC), Roman general and statesman. He established the First Triumvirate with Pompey and Crassus (60), and became consul in 59, obtaining command of the provinces of Illyricum, Cisalpine Gaul, and Transalpine Gaul. Between 58 and 51 he fought the Gallic Wars, subjugating Transalpine Gaul, invading Britain (55–54), and acquiring immense power. Resentment at this on the part of Pompey and other powerful Romans led to civil war, which resulted in Pompey's defeat at Pharsalus (48). Caesar was made dictator of the Roman Empire and initiated a series of reforms, including the introduction of the Julian calendar. Hostility to Caesar's autocracy culminated in his murder on the Ides (15th) of March in a conspiracy led by Brutus and Cassius.

Jung /jʊŋ/, Carl (Gustav) (1875–1961), Swiss psychologist. He collaborated with Sigmund Freud in the development of the psychoanalytic theory of personality, though he later divorced himself from Freud's viewpoint because of its preoccupation with sexuality as the determinant of personality. Jung originated the concept of introvert and extrovert personality, and of the four psychological functions of sensation, intuition, thinking, and feeling. In his major work, The Psychology of the Unconscious (1912), he proposed the existence of a collective unconscious, which he combined with a theory of archetypes for studying the history and psychology of religion.

Kant /kænt/, Immanuel (1724–1804), German philosopher. In the Critique of Pure Reason (1781) he countered Hume's empiricism by arguing that the human mind can neither confirm, deny, nor scientifically demonstrate the ultimate nature of reality. He claimed, however, that it can know the objects of experience, which it interprets with notions of space and time and orders according to twelve categories of thought, grouped under the classes of quantity, quality, reason, and modality. Kant's Critique of Practical Reason (1788) deals with ethics and affirms the existence of an absolute moral law – the categorical imperative – whose motivation is reason. His idealism left an important legacy for the philosophy of Hegel and Fichte. □ Kantian adj. & n. Kantianism n.

Kelvin /'kelvɪn/, William Thomson, 1st Baron (1824–1907), British physicist, professor of natural philosophy at Glasgow from 1846 to 1895. He restated the second law of thermodynamics in 1850, and introduced the absolute scale of temperature. His concept of an electromagnetic field influenced Maxwell's electromagnetic theory of light, which Kelvin never accepted. He was involved in the laying of the first Atlantic cable, for which he invented several instruments, and he devised many scientific instruments for other purposes. Kelvin's calculation of an age for the earth, although a gross underestimate, showed that physics could be useful in helping to establish a geological time-scale.

kelvin /'kelvɪn/ n. the SI base unit of thermodynamic temperature (symbol: K). One kelvin is the fraction $^{1}/_{273.16}$ of the thermodynamic temperature of the triple point of water, and is equal in magnitude to the degree Celsius. [KELVIN]

Kelvin scale a scale of temperature with absolute zero as zero and the triple point of water exactly 273.16 degrees. (See also KELVIN.)

Kendall /'kend(ə)l/, Edward Calvin (1886–1972), American biochemist. He was the first to isolate crystalline thyroxine from the thyroid gland. From the adrenal cortex he obtained a number of steroid hormones, one of which was later named cortisone, and several of which are now of great value in the treatment of rheumatic, allergic, and inflammatory diseases. He shared a Nobel Prize in 1950.

kendo /'kendəʊ/ n. a Japanese form of fencing with two-handed bamboo swords. Its origins go back more than 1,500 years; it developed from the need for non-lethal practice in the art of swordsmanship, which was an essential skill for the samurai of medieval Japan. [Jap., = sword-way]

Keneally /kə'nælɪ, -'ni:lɪ/, Thomas (Michael) (b.1935), Australian novelist. He first gained notice for The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith (1972). Later works include war novels such as Confederates (1979), and the Booker Prize-winning Schindler's Ark (1982), the true story of the German industrialist Oskar Schindler, who helped more than 1,200 Jews to escape death in Nazi concentration camps; the book was filmed by Steven Spielberg in 1993 as Schindler's List.

Kennedy[1] /'kenədɪ/, Edward Moore ('Teddy') (b.1932), American Democratic politician. The brother of John F. Kennedy and Robert F. Kennedy, he was elected to the Senate in 1962. His subsequent political career was overshadowed by his involvement in a mysterious fatal car accident at Chappaquiddick Island (1969), although he remains a prominent Democratic spokesman.

Kennedy[2] /'kenədɪ/, John F(itzgerald) (known as 'JFK') (1917–63), American Democratic statesman, 35th President of the US 1961–3. A national war hero during the Second World War, Kennedy became, at 43, the youngest man ever to be elected President, as well as the first Catholic. He gained a popular reputation as an advocate of civil rights, although reforms were delayed by Congress until 1964. In foreign affairs he recovered from the Bay of Pigs fiasco to demand successfully the withdrawal of Soviet missiles from Cuba (see CUBAN MISSILE CRISIS), and negotiated the Test-Ban Treaty of 1963 with the USSR and the UK. Kennedy was assassinated while riding in a motorcade through Dallas, Texas, in Nov. 1963; Lee Harvey Oswald was charged with his murder (see OSWALD).

Kennedy[3] /'kenədɪ/, Robert F(rancis) (1925–68), American Democratic statesman. The brother of John F. Kennedy and Edward Kennedy, he closely assisted his brother John in domestic policy, serving as Attorney-General (1961–4), and was a champion of the civil-rights movement. Robert Kennedy stood as a prospective presidential candidate in 1968, but was assassinated during his campaign.

Kepler /'keplə(r)/, Johannes (1571–1630), German astronomer. He settled in Prague in 1599, becoming Tycho Brahe's assistant and later court mathematician to the emperor. His analysis of Brahe's planetary observations enabled him to discover the laws governing planetary motion, and foreshadowed the general application of scientific method to astronomy. The first two laws recognized the elliptical orbits of the planets; in Harmonices Mundi (1620) he expounded the third law of planetary dynamics, relating the distances of the planets from the sun to their orbital periods. Despite these advances, Kepler's approach remained medieval in spirit; he believed in the music of the spheres and sought an inner relationship between the planets that would express it.

kinetic theory n. a theory that explains the physical properties of matter in terms of the motions of its constituent particles. According to the kinetic theory the temperature of a solid, liquid, or gas is a measure of the mean kinetic energy distributed among its atoms or molecules. In solids the particles vibrate about a fixed point; in liquids they slide past each other but remain in close contact; in gases they move freely and independently. Evaporation from a liquid, for example, occurs when the more energetic, and hence faster-moving, molecules escape. Simple particle theories have existed from antiquity, but modern kinetic theory, based on statistics, was developed in the 19th century by Clausius, Maxwell, Boltzmann, and others. Kinetic theory has had most success in describing thermal properties and the behaviour of gases.

▪ In early medieval England knights formed an élite cavalry force giving military service (usually forty days a year) in return for the lands they held under the feudal system. During the 12th century they gained in economic and social importance, becoming involved in local administration, and derived further impetus from the formation of the great religious and secular orders in the wake of the Crusades. The foremost religious organizations included the Knights Hospitallers and the Knights Templars; among British orders the oldest, and the only surviving medieval order, is the Order of the Garter. Men knighted by the sovereign today usually become knights bachelor rather than members of an order of knighthood.

Knightsbridge /'naɪtsbrɪdʒ/ a district in the West End of London, to the south of Hyde Park, noted for its fashionable and expensive shops.

Knights Hospitallers a military and religious order founded as the Knights of the Hospital of St John at Jerusalem in the 11th century. Originally protectors of pilgrims, they also undertook the care of the sick. During the Middle Ages they became a powerful and wealthy military force, with foundations in various European countries; their military power ended when Malta was surrendered to Napoleon (1798). In England, the order was revived in 1831 and was responsible for the foundation of the St John Ambulance Brigade in 1888 (see ST JOHN AMBULANCE).

Knights Templars a military and religious order founded in 1118 (as the Poor Knights of Christ and of the Temple of Solomon) to protect pilgrims from bandits in the Holy Land, where the order was given quarters on the site of Solomon's temple in Jerusalem. The order became powerful and wealthy, particularly in the 13th century, but its members' arrogance towards rulers, together with their wealth and their rivalry with the Knights Hospitallers, led to their downfall; the order was suppressed in 1312, many of its possessions being given to the Hospitallers. The Inner and Middle Temple in London are on the site of the Templars' English headquarters.

Knossos /'knɒsəs, 'nɒs-/ the principal city of Minoan Crete, the remains of which are situated on the north coast of Crete. Excavations by Sir Arthur Evans from 1900 onwards revealed the remains of a luxurious and spectacularly decorated complex of buildings, which he named the Palace of Minos, with frescos of landscapes, animal life, and the sport of bull-leaping. The city site was occupied from neolithic times until *c.*1200 BC; in *c.*1450 BC Crete was overrun by the Mycenaeans, but the palace was not finally destroyed until the 14th or early 13th century BC.

Korea /kəˈrɪə/ a region of eastern Asia forming a peninsula between the Sea of Japan and the Yellow Sea, now divided into the countries of North Korea and South Korea. Possessed of a distinct national and cultural identity and ruled from the 14th century by the Korean Yi dynasty, Korea has suffered as a result of its position between Chinese and Japanese spheres of influence. A period of Chinese domination was ended by the Sino-Japanese War (1894–5), and after the Russo-Japanese War a decade later the country was annexed by Japan (1910). After the Japanese surrender at the end of the Second World War, Korea was partitioned along the 38th parallel, the north being occupied by the Soviets and the south by the US. (See also KOREAN WAR, NORTH KOREA, SOUTH KOREA.)

Korean /kəˈrɪən/ n. & adj. ● n. 1 a native or national of Korea. 2 the language of Korea. (See note below.) ● adj. of or relating to Korea or its people or language.

▪ Korean is spoken by more than 60 million people in North and South Korea, and by large numbers in China, Russia, Japan, and North America. Its linguistic affiliations are uncertain, although it is almost certainly related to Japanese. Its vocabulary and orthography have been heavily influenced by Chinese; in South Korea Chinese characters are used in addition to the Korean alphabet, although in the North only the Korean alphabet is used.

Korean War the war of 1950–3 between North and South Korea, which began with the invasion of the South by North Korean forces. The United Nations voted to oppose the invasion, and UN troops, dominated by US forces, invaded and advanced to the border of North Korea with China. China intervened on the side of the North, and for a time there appeared to be a danger of global conflict; however, peace negotiations were begun in 1951, and the war ended two years later with the restoration of previous boundaries.

kosher /ˈkəʊʃə(r)/ adj. & n. ● adj. 1 (of food or premises in which food is sold, cooked, or eaten) fulfilling the requirements of Jewish law. (See note below.) 2 colloq. correct; genuine; legitimate. ● n. 1 kosher food. 2 a kosher shop. [Heb. kāšēr proper] ▪ Restrictions on the foods suitable for Jews are derived from the Mosaic prescriptions found in the books of Leviticus (11) and Deuteronomy (14). Animals must be slaughtered and prepared in the prescribed way, in which the blood is drained from the body, while certain creatures, such as pigs and shellfish, are forbidden altogether; meat and milk must not be cooked or consumed together, and separate utensils must be kept for each. Strict observance of these rules, which may well have originated for reasons of hygiene, is today confined mainly to Orthodox Jews.

Kurdistan /ˌkɜːdɪˈstɑːn/ an extensive plateau and mountainous region in the Middle East, south of the Caucasus, including large parts of eastern Turkey, northern Iraq, western Iran, eastern Syria, Armenia, and Azerbaijan. For centuries it has been the traditional home of the Kurdish people. The creation of a separate state of Kurdistan was proposed by the Allies after the First World War, but this was abandoned in 1923 when Turkey reasserted its territorial authority in the region. In 1970 the Kurds in Iraq were allocated an autonomous region with limited powers of self-determination, but in 1988 came under attack by Saddam Hussein's troops, and many fled to Turkey and Iran. Following further persecution in the aftermath of the Gulf War of 1991, 'safe havens' were established for the Kurds in northern Iraq. Although not officially recognized as a state, this region is called Kurdistan by its inhabitants, elections have taken place, and a coalition government has been elected comprising the Kurdistan Party and the Patriotic Union of Kurdistan. There is still armed conflict and political instability in the area; Iran, Syria, and Turkey, as well as Iraq, oppose the creation of a Kurdish state.

Labourite /'leɪbəˌraɪt/ n. (US Laborite) a member or follower of the Labour Party.

Labour Party a left-of-centre political party formed to represent the interests of ordinary working people. The Labour Party in Britain had its roots in the trade union movement, which combined with the Independent Labour Party, the Fabian Society, and other socialist groups in 1900 to form the Labour Representation Committee, changing its name to the Labour Party after electoral successes in 1906; Keir Hardie was its co-founder and first leader. (See also INDEPENDENT LABOUR PARTY.) After the First World War, Labour was reorganized as a true national party and replaced the Liberals as the country's second major political party. Having formed minority governments in 1924 and 1929–31 it entered Churchill's wartime coalition before forming its first majority government under Clement Attlee (1945–51). This government established the welfare state and carried out a substantial nationalization programme. Labour subsequently held power in 1964–70 and 1974–9, after which it suffered disunity and the loss of its traditional industrial working class constituency. Under Tony Blair (leader from 1994) the party took a centre-left position, and in 1997 gained its largest ever majority.

Lamarck /læ'mɑːk/, Jean Baptiste de (1744–1829), French naturalist, an early proponent of organic evolution. He suggested that species could have evolved from each other by small changes in their structure, and that the mechanism of such change was that characteristics acquired in order to survive could be passed on to offspring. His theory found little favour in his lifetime (it was criticized notably by Georges Cuvier), but the concept of inheritance of acquired characteristics was revived by those who did not accept Darwin's later theory of natural selection. It is not usually accepted today.

(See note below.) 2 the Finno-Ugric language of this people. ● adj. of or relating to the Lapps or their language. [Sw. Lapp, perh. orig. a term of contempt: cf. MHG lappe simpleton]

▪ Originating in the region of Lake Onega in Russia, the Lapps moved westward to northern Scandinavia about 10,000 years ago. Although nominally under Swedish and Norwegian government since the Middle Ages, they were not Christianized until the 18th century. The language of the Lapps, of which there are several mutually unintelligible dialects, is related to Finnish. Today the majority of Lapps live in Norway and Sweden, with small communities in Finland and Russia. Traditionally associated with the domestication and herding of reindeer, few Lapps continue the nomadic herding of the animals, most now living in permanent settlements with year-round pasture or deriving their livelihood from a combination of fishing, hunting, trapping, and farming. Scandinavian industrialization — particularly hydroelectric schemes, mining, and new roads — has severely disrupted the Lapps' traditional lifestyle.

laser /'leɪzə(r)/ n. a device that generates an intense beam of coherent monochromatic light (or other electromagnetic radiation) by stimulated emission from excited atoms or molecules. (See note below.) ☐ laser printer a printer in which a laser is used to form a pattern of dots on a photosensitive drum corresponding to the pattern of print required on a page. [*l*ight *a*mplification by *s*timulated *e*mission of *r*adiation]

- A laser is basically a tube (with reflective ends) containing a suitable substance. The atoms or molecules of the lasing material are forced into an excited state by the application of energy in some form, e.g. light, microwaves, etc., from which they can return to normal by emitting light of a particular wavelength. In a laser the emission of one photon of light stimulates other excited atoms to emit similar photons. The light is reflected back and forth along the tube, building up in intensity; the laser beam is emitted through one (partially reflective) end of the tube. The first laser was built in 1960 by the US physicist Theodore Harold Maiman (b. 1927); it employed a ruby rod and emitted pulses of visible light. Many kinds of laser have been developed, emitting radiation in various regions of the spectrum, either as continuous or pulsed beams. The power and pinpoint accuracy of laser beams finds many applications, e.g. in drilling and cutting, alignment and guidance, and in surgery; the optical properties are exploited in holography, reading bar-codes, and in recording and playing compact discs. ▪ Latin is an Indo-European language, inflected and with complex syntax, the ancestor of all the Romance languages. It was originally the dialect of the Latini or people of Latium. With the rise of Rome it spread as the official and literary language of the Roman Empire. In the Middle Ages it remained the international medium of communication in western Europe, the language of law, the sciences, and in particular of liturgy; it was the universal language of the Roman Catholic mass until the mid-20th century. Latin of the post-classical period is distinguished chronologically as late Latin (AD *c.*200–600), medieval Latin (*c.*600–1500), and modern Latin (since 1500); the latter is used for the scientific names of animals and plants and many Latin terms persist in legal and medical language. Other forms of Latin include silver Latin, which is the literary language and style of the century following the death of Augustus in AD 14, and vulgar Latin, a term applied to popular and provincial forms of Latin, especially those from which the Romance languages developed.

- Some ancient civilizations had elaborate systems of drainage and lavatories which in construction surpassed anything of later periods up to the 19th century. The first English flushing lavatory or water-closet was produced in Elizabethan times, but the innovation did not become established and was never patented; the first patent for a water-closet was taken out in 1755 by a Scottish watchmaker and engineer, Alexander Cumming (1733–1814). By mid-Victorian times most middle-class homes had indoor lavatories, but until the end of the 19th century these drained into cesspools, which were later connected by pipes to town sewers. Improvements on the basic design included ceramic pans to replace the earlier metal ones and the provision of an S-bend in the outlet pipe (in which trapped water prevents drain odours from rising).

Lavoisier /læˈvwʌzɪˌeɪ/, Antoine Laurent (1743–94), French scientist, regarded as the father of modern chemistry. He caused a revolution in chemistry by his description of the true nature of combustion, his rigorous methods of analysis, and his development of a new rational chemical nomenclature. He realized that it was Joseph Priestley's 'dephlogisticated air' that combined with substances during burning, and (believing it to be a constituent of acids) he renamed the gas oxygen. He held a number of important public offices, and his involvement in the collection of indirect taxes led to his death by guillotine in the French Revolution.

Law /lɔː/, (Andrew) Bonar (1858–1923), Canadian-born British Conservative statesman, Prime Minister 1922–3. Brought up in Scotland, he was a successful businessman before entering Parliament in 1900. Lawrence^1 /'lorəns/, D(avid) H(erbert) (1885–1930), English novelist, poet, and essayist. Although he gained acclaim for Sons and Lovers (1913), his subsequent work met with hostile reactions; he left England permanently in 1919 and thereafter lived chiefly in Italy and Mexico. A moralist who believed that industrial society was causing man to become divorced from his basic instincts, he is chiefly remembered for his frank exploration of sexual relationships, as in The Rainbow (1915) and Women in Love (1921); Lady Chatterley's Lover (published in Italy, 1928) was only published in Britain in an unexpurgated form after an unsuccessful prosecution for obscenity in 1960.

Lawrence^2 /'lorəns/, Ernest Orlando (1901–58), American physicist. He developed the first circular particle accelerator, later called a cyclotron, capable of achieving very high electron voltages. This opened the way for the new science of high-energy physics, with the production of many new isotopes and elements, and Lawrence and his team investigated some of the subatomic particles generated. He also worked on providing fissionable material for the atom bomb. He received the Nobel Prize for physics in 1939.

Lawrence^3 /'lorəns/, Sir Thomas (1769–1830), English painter. He first achieved success with his full-length portrait (1789) of Queen Charlotte, the wife of King George III. Many portrait commissions followed and by 1810 he was recognized as the leading portrait painter of his time. In 1818 he was sent by the Prince Regent (later George IV) to paint the portraits of heads of state and military leaders after the allied victory over Napoleon.

Lawrence^4 /'lorəns/, T(homas) E(dward) (known as Lawrence of Arabia) (1888–1935), British soldier and writer. From 1916 onwards he helped to organize and lead the Arab revolt against the Turks in the Middle East. His campaign of guerrilla raids contributed to General Allenby's eventual victory in Palestine in 1918; Lawrence described this period in The Seven Pillars of Wisdom (1926). In 1922 he enlisted in the RAF under an assumed name to avoid attention and remained in the ranks of that service for most of the rest of his life. He was killed in a motorcycle accident.

Lawrence, St (Latin name Laurentius) (d.258), Roman martyr and deacon of Rome. According to tradition, Lawrence was ordered by the prefect of Rome to deliver up the treasure of the Church; when in response to this order he presented the poor people of Rome to the prefect, he was roasted to death on a gridiron. Feast day, 10 Aug.

Leavis /'liːvɪs/, F(rank) R(aymond) (1895–1978), English literary critic. As a teacher of English at Cambridge from the 1920s and founder and editor of the quarterly Scrutiny (1932–53), he exerted a considerable influence on literary criticism. He regarded the rigorous critical study of English literature as central to preserving cultural continuity, which he considered to be under threat from technology and the mass media. He was a champion of D. H. Lawrence and led the way for a more serious appreciation of Charles Dickens. His books include The Great Tradition (1948) and The Common Pursuit (1952).

Lebanon /'lebənən/ a country in the Middle East with a coastline on the Mediterranean Sea; pop. (est. 1990) 2,700,000; official language, Arabic; capital, Beirut. The Lebanon region was the centre of the Phoenician culture (*c.*2700–450 BC). The mountains of Lebanon were a refuge for Christians from the 7th century, and were partly occupied by the Muslim Druze from the 11th century. The area was part of the Ottoman Empire from the early 16th century, becoming a French mandate after the First World War. Lebanon achieved independence in 1943 after the defeat of the Vichy French garrison by the Allies during the Second World War. Until the mid-1970s the country prospered, with Beirut the commercial capital of the Middle East. Friction between the previously dominant Christian community and the Muslims, the influx of Palestinian refugees, and repeated Middle Eastern wars, have chronically destabilized the country and led to the growth of armed militias and intermittent civil war. Syrian forces have been present in parts of the country since 1976, and an invasion by Israel in 1982 led to the evacuation of the Palestinians. Israeli forces later withdrew to a buffer zone on the southern border. The first general elections for twenty years were held in 1992. □ Lebanese /ˌlebə'niːz/ adj. & n.

Lebanon Mountains a range of mountains in Lebanon. Running parallel to the Mediterranean coast, it rises to a height of 3,087 m (10,022 ft) at Qornet es Saouda. It is separated from the Anti-Lebanon range, on the border with Syria, by the Bekaa valley.

Lebensraum /'leɪbənzˌraʊm/ n. the territory which a state or nation believes is needed for its natural development. Leibniz /ˈlaɪbnɪts/, Gottfried Wilhelm (1646–1716), German rationalist philosopher, mathematician, and logician. He spent his life in the diplomatic and political service and in 1700 was appointed first president of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin. Leibniz is chiefly known as an exponent of optimism; he believed that the world is fundamentally harmonious and good, being composed of single units (monads), each of which is self-contained but acts in harmony with every other; these form an ascending hierarchy culminating in God. Their harmony is ordained by God, who never acts except for a reason that requires it, and so this world is the best of all possible worlds (a view satirized in Voltaire's Candide). Leibniz made the important distinction between necessary (logical) truths and contingent (factual) truths, and proposed a universal logical language which would eliminate ambiguity. He also devised a method of calculus independently of Newton.

Lenin /ˈlenɪn/, Vladimir Ilich (born Vladimir Ilich Ulyanov) (1870–1924), the principal figure in the Russian Revolution and first Premier (Chairman of the Council of People's Commissars) of the Soviet Union 1918–24. Lenin was the first political leader to attempt to put Marxist principles into practice, though, like Marx, he saw the need for a transitional period to full communism, during which there would be a 'dictatorship of the proletariat'. The policies that he pursued led ultimately to the establishment of Marxism-Leninism in the Soviet Union and, later, in China. Born in Russia, he lived in Switzerland from 1900, but was instrumental in the split between the Bolsheviks and Mensheviks in 1903, when he became leader of the more radical Bolsheviks. He returned to Russia in 1917, established Bolshevik control after the overthrow of the tsar, and in 1918 became head of state; he founded the Third International or Comintern (see INTERNATIONAL) the following year. With Trotsky's help, he defeated counter-revolutionary forces in the Russian Civil War, but was forced to moderate his socio-economic policies to allow the country to recover from the effects of war and revolution. During the last years of his life he denounced, but was unable to prevent, the concentration of power in the hands of Stalin.
